*Celebrating 100 Years of Football
A New Look to the Campus*

WINTER 1992

THERE IS A LOT OF TALK AND PRINT THESE days about how the world is changing. It is a different place. We all read the papers and understand (although I must admit that it is difficult for me to comprehend) that the world is a fundamentally different place from what it was a couple of years ago. The Soviet empire is gone, vanished almost overnight. The nations of Western Europe are uniting. No more Cold War. Geopolitics has changed. World economics has changed. The Good Guys and the Bad Guys are no longer easy to identify.

There is a lot of talk and a lot of print about what it all means to us, here, in the United States. Our own economy has been in turmoil. The rules of our own game are changing. We cannot take for granted what we used to take for granted.

What does it all mean? What is in store in the future? I read and hear lots of opinions, but few answers, because nobody really knows! It is a new world. It is, suddenly, a new ball-game.

I also read and hear a lot of questions about "roles" in this new ball-game—the role of America, the role of a college education, the role of the liberal arts, the role of Hampden-Sydney College. Again, I hear and read lots of opinions and few answers, but nobody really knows!

In the quarter of a century I have been working with educational institutions, defining the role of any institution has been a relatively straightforward (and largely statistical) exercise—SAT scores, number of graduates in specific fields and corporations, faculty achievement statistics, etc. No more. Never have the sands shifted beneath our feet like this, never have the rules of the game shifted as the game is in play, never has the football field itself begun to undulate as the ball is hiked, never has the height of the basket gone up and down—after we have taken a shot—until now. It is a very different world.

None of us remembers when this happened before. But Hampden-Sydney does. Hampden-Sydney remembers when the world was becoming a different place, when freedom was a new concept and democracy was, among nations, the new kid on the block. Its founders recognized that America was about "the invention of the self" and that its heroes were "pilgrims" on a "perpetual quest," always becoming, never thinking that things were as they would always be.

*"If America is about nothing else, it is about the invention of the self....
Who else is an American hero
if not a wandering pilgrim who goes forth on a perpetual quest?
Melville sent Ahab
across the world's oceans
in search of a fabulous beast, and Thoreau followed the unicorn of his conscience into the silence
of the woods."*

LEWIS LAPHAM
Harper's
January 1992

Hampden-Sydney was around when Melville and Thoreau were defining the American hero. Hampden-Sydney was educating young men not to take things for granted. Hampden-Sydney was educating young men to go out into this new world with an understanding of the basic principles and values which had been the engine driving the undercurrents inexorably shaping their world in spite of the political and military and economic power visible on the surface.

And, mirabile dictu, here we are again, more than two centuries later, and Hampden-Sydney is still doing the same thing. As Alan Farrell, professor of French (in 1992), has observed, "Worlds change a lot in four years. What we are here to do—and what we've been doing for 216 years—is to arm students not for the world as it exists now but for any world, and to show them where to find, inside themselves, the tools to change the world if they find one they don't like, that's not as it should be."

This two-hundred-year-old role of Hampden-Sydney is not described easily in computer graphics and statistics. It is not communicated easily in the jargon of contemporary funding agencies. But it has profound value—to the present and future of this nation and this world.

As readers of this publication—alumni and parents and friends of this small College in rural Southside Virginia—you bear a singular insight. Only you can recognize the true value of this College. No one else knows, as only you know, how this College prepares its students to be pilgrims on their quest into the distant lands of the uncertain future. Only you know how this College helps these new pilgrims put into their back-packs the wisdom of those who, in the past, have crossed the thresholds of futures in which the world has been a different place from what it was before.

The founders of Hampden-Sydney were standing on the threshold of a new world. Their objective was to establish a college which would educate leaders who, with the tools of judgment and values and intellectual depth to cross this threshold and to succeed in that new world, would make that new world itself a success.

Two centuries later, Hampden-Sydney now stands on the next threshold, facing the challenge to sustain its mission in an uncertain future.

Football Program Celebrates One-Hundredth Season

By Dean Hybl

MANY PEOPLE HAD never heard of football and fewer people understood it when William Bull and several classmates played the University of Richmond in Hampden-Sydney College's first organized game on Thanksgiving Day in 1892. Football was then a sport in its infancy; it had little tradition and its few rules were subject to broad interpretation.

Now, 100 years later, Hampden-Sydney football has become the cornerstone of a very successful athletic program, while the game itself has evolved into a sport enjoyed by millions of people throughout the world.

In that first game, the Tigers lost to the University of Richmond 24-0, but since then H-SC football has been on the winning end of many games. The Tigers have enjoyed 49 winning seasons, finishing their 100th year of football with an overall 400-348-38 record.

In the days before schools were categorized by athletic divisions, the Tigers often faced—and beat—many of the region's top football teams, including Virginia, Richmond, VMI, Wake Forest, William & Mary, East Carolina, and Maryland.

Hampden-Sydney and Richmond were particular rivals early in the football history of both schools, often playing more than once a season. The Tigers and Spiders met on the gridiron 54 times between 1892 and 1948; Richmond holds a 31-15-8 advantage.

While the first game in Hampden-Sydney football history was against

HISTORICAL PHOTOS FROM HAMPDEN-SYDNEY ARCHIVES

The first really great H-SC team was this 1900 squad, coached by H.L. Shaner and captained by W. W. Kemper. In four games the Tigers scored 83 points while keeping their opponents scoreless. In its finale, the team defeated the University of Richmond 34-0.

Richmond, the first victory came two years later when H-SC defeated William & Mary 28-0. (Although the schools have not met since 1942, the Tigers hold a 21-14 series advantage over the Tribe.) The Tigers did not have similar luck in their encounters with Virginia Tech; they failed to beat the Hokies in 24 meetings. Their only victory in 18 games against the University of Virginia came in 1935 when the Tigers beat the Wahoos 13-7.

Though all Hampden-Sydney's football victories are treasured, the most important game for Tiger alumni is the annual season-ending encounter with rival Randolph-Macon. Each meeting between the two schools is a war and determines alumni bragging rights for the upcoming year. The Tigers and Yellow Jackets have met 96 times, Hampden-Sydney holding a 49-36-11 advantage over Randolph-Macon.

In the best Hampden-Sydney tradition, the football program has also included some special games. In 1970 the Tigers earned the first of their two consecutive trips to the Knute Rockne Bowl in Atlantic City by defeating Randolph-Macon 14-6. The record crowd of 9,000 (which included Vice President Nguyen Coa Ky from South Vietnam) witnessed a remarkable performance by Hampden-Sydney freshman Tracy Powers. Powers rushed for 216 yards on an incredible 56 carries and scored both Tiger touchdowns. In 1976, the Tigers made their television debut in the first Division III regular season game ever to be shown by a major network. The ABC crew of Chris Carmody, Larry Kamm, George Pennell, Steve Davis, and Steve Zabriskie, a crowd of 9,000 spectators, and a regional television audience watched as the Tigers defeated number-one ranked Madison College (now James Madison University) 21-14. That victory moved H-SC to third in the national rankings and brought the school mention in several national magazines. Four years later, ABC returned to Death Valley to broadcast a game between Hampden-Sydney and Salisbury State. This time the magic of the TV camera did not help H-SC produce a victory; the Tigers lost to the Sea Gulls 28-13.

Conference play has also been an important part of the football tradition at Hampden-Sydney. Since 1950, the Tigers have won 14 conference championships, 10 as a member of the Mason-Dixon Conference and four since joining the Old Dominion Athletic Conference in 1976. In addition to their Knute Rockne Bowl appearances following both the 1970 and 1971 seasons, they made it to the NCAA Division III Playoffs following the 1977 season.

Many individual players and teams stand out in the history of Hampden-Sydney football. Perhaps the first great H-SC team was the 1900 squad, coached by H.L. Shaner and captained by W. W. Kemper. In four games the Tigers scored 83 points while keeping their opponents scoreless. In its finale, the team defeated the University of Richmond 34-0.

It would be seven decades before another H-SC team would finish a regular, multi-game season undefeated. The 1971 squad, coached by Stokeley Fulton, manhandled its 10 regular-season opponents. The Tigers outscored their opponents 213-34, and only once did an opponent manage to score in double figures. However, this team would not finish the season undefeated because of their loss to Bridgeport College (17-12) in the Knute Rockne Bowl.

*The very first football team (above) which played in the fall of 1892; by the next year the players had assumed a more formidable look (see next page). This photograph, from the 1893 yearbook, also the first of its kind, reminds us that the need to record the victories of this and other athletic teams (baseball had been around since at least 1884) probably lent momentum to efforts to found a yearbook at Hampden-Sydney. titles, J. Stokeley Fulton '55 was the most successful coach in the first 100 years of Hampden-Sydney football. But coaching was not Stokeley's only claim to fame at Hampden-Sydney—he was also one of the finest players ever to wear the garnet and grey. He served as team captain twice and in 1954 was a first-team All-American offensive center. Stokeley and another H-SC legend, Lynn Chewning, are honored as members of the Virginia Sports Hall of Fame.

Coming to Hampden-Sydney as a student in 1910, Charles "Yank" Bernier was a standout athlete as a football quarterback and a baseball pitcher. Following his graduation in 1912 he became H-SC's first full-time head football coach and guided the Tigers for 21 seasons. His career record of 68-101-17 puts him second to Stokeley Fulton on H-SC's career victory list.

Since Lloyd Arehart and Charlie Garden became the first Tiger players named All-American in 1935, 48 Hampden-Sydney players have been honored as among the best in the country. Seven of those players, Chewning, Fulton, Lewis Everett, Ed Kelly, Tim Smith, Phil Suazo, and Jimmy Hondroulis, have been recognized as first team All-Americans.

While football is important at Hampden-Sydney, the young men who wear the garnet and grey come to the College primarily to receive an education. Each year the College Sports Information Directors of America recognize some of the top student-athletes as GTE Academic All-Americans. Five Hampden-Sydney football players have received this prestigious recognition. John Dickinson, W. R. Jones, and David Brickhill were honored as first-team selections, while Hiter Harris, Brad Cary, and T.C. Wilson were named to the second team. In 1990 Jones became the first Hampden-Sydney player to be selected more than once.

Although the game on the field is usually the primary event on "football Saturdays," the festivities at Hampden-Sydney are not limited to the field of play. Tailgating has always been an important aspect of game day, and Hampden-Sydney fans are known to prepare some extravagant and delicious pregame meals. The grassy hill that surrounds the home side of the stadium has traditionally been a place where families can bring a blanket and enjoy the game as well as the beautiful weather of a fall afternoon in Virginia. It is also common during the game to see many students and alumni standing along the sideline offering support at close range.

Before permanent stands were constructed around the field (thanks to the generosity of the Hundley family), it was not unusual for spectators to circle the field with their automobiles.

More than 1,000 men have worn the garnet and grey on the gridiron over the last 100 years, all of them sharing with friends and community a love for the game of football. While particular plays, games, and seasons may be blurred by the passage of time, the significance of football in the history, character, and life of Hampden-Sydney remains clear and bright.

Renewed Center Campus “Better than Good Old Days”

By Eunice Carwile

THE SIEGE IS OVER. The jackhammers, earth-movers, saws, and trowels are gone.

Ahhhhh. Relief.

Now that the cacophony of change no longer prevents undistracted thought, we can evaluate the campus renewal begun in 1989. As one of our professors is wont to say, “So? What have we got?” Most obvious, of course, is a 40,000-square-foot dining hall and student center, crowned with bronze-roofed cupola and fronted by a brick plaza, that has risen on land that three years ago was marsh. Cushing Hall (c. 1830) has two new neighbors, the Federal-style Carpenter residence halls. Beds of new trees, shrubs, and flowers decorate corners and banks. And between Cushing and Graham halls lies the restructured Green (photo below).

We also “have got” changes that, while not immediately obvious, make life at Hampden-Sydney safer and easier. Johns, Cushing, and other buildings have been rehabilitated (in the strictest sense—made more habitable and operable). Smoke detectors, sprinklers, or fire escapes have been installed. A new campus-wide communications network and water distribution system are also in place.

Did all this come together by a happy accident? Certainly not, but the work that has been done is almost unbelievable considering what we had and what state it was in two years ago.

When the Trustees adopted the Strategic Plan (formally, Toward the Year 2000: A Strategic Plan for Hampden-Sydney College) in 1989, they wanted to “provide a basis for sustained planning . . . to nurture Hampden-Sydney as a setting for intellectual and personal growth by faculty and students alike.”

BUT BEFORE THE College could meet the challenges of the nineties, much less of the twenty-first century, it had to solve some of the problems of the past.

The most serious problem we faced was inadequate space. A campus meant to house 750 students cannot easily accommodate 840—or 900, or 1000. And a dining hall that seats 192 people should not be the place where one-half to two-thirds of the students eat three times a day.

That our physical facilities were inadequate was disturbing. Worse, though, was the revelation that those we had were in disrepair. A facilities audit (a thorough examination of buildings, ground to rooftop) begun in 1989 as part of the Strategic Plan revealed that this charming, almost idyllic place was in reality dangerously in need of repair. All twenty-eight of the buildings studied violated “life safety codes”—faulty wiring, hard-to-reach or non-existent exits, no fire escapes, or structural damage. Most of them violated building code standards: missing window frames, crumbling ceiling plaster, and so on. Cushing Hall, the worst but followed closely by Johns, Bagby, and Morton Halls, was cited as having “urgent” structural defects. Its exterior masonry was crumbling and its walls “deteriorated, undermined.” Plumbing leaks had caused plaster ceilings to crack or fall. The original electrical wiring had not been installed properly and was outdated and deteriorating. Doors that opened inward would hinder escape in case of fire. But the worst, and most imminently dangerous, of Cushing Hall's problems was its roof, which was “ready to literally slide off the building,” according to Norman Krueger, Vice President for Business Affairs. Joists, rafters, and sheathing—the entire roof frame—were decayed.

Also in 1989, when Trustees received a campus assessment and horticultural management plan from Van Yahres Associates, landscape architects, they found that more than our buildings had been neglected. The architects had studied 212 of the center campus's 442 trees. Of the 212, only 12 (6%) were rated as outstanding. Sixty-two trees (29%) were rated as poor or “should be removed.” In his report, Mike Van Yahres, owner of the Charlottesville-based firm, said that while the campus was “an excellent example of a typical college design of the 19th century, when the romantic notion of isolating colleges in the sublimity of nature prevailed,” it was also an excellent example of how such a natural setting can deteriorate. “A majority of the mature trees on campus are declining,” he said, “and the central grounds are cluttered with service facilities, utilities, and asphalt parkways.”

THIS WAS NOT THE first time that our “atmosphere of sound learning” had suffered from inadequate space, substandard physical facilities, neglected grounds, or all three. From the beginning, the popularity of the new “Academy” established in 1775 surprised even its founding trustees and made the College's first years a struggle to accommodate those who wanted to study here. When classes began in January 1776, there was no building in which to house or educate students. Some of the 105 young men who had enrolled lived with the steward; some lived with “a few neighbors” in the area; some were forced to live in shanties they built with the shingles of the roof intended for the uncompleted principal building. And there was not enough money. The 1777 lottery scheme to raise a building fund failed in part because of war-time inflation. A request for state subsidy withered away in the House of Burgesses, the legislative body preoccupied with managing a revolution.

Having survived its first few years, largely on tuition and the support of trustees and others, Hampden-Sydney was granted a charter in 1783. But, while the curriculum continued to grow, the development and maintenance of housing and academic space lagged behind. By 1820, the year Jonathan P. Cushing became acting president, "Hampden-Sydney was not particularly attractive to a young scholar. . . . The buildings were old, uncomfortable, and inadequate, the library and laboratory were facilities in name only, the financial resources meager" (Bradshaw, History of Hampden-Sydney College, Volume I). The trustees did not think the campus attractive to older scholars either; they were afraid of losing professors to colleges in the north. Again, as in 1776, trustees asked for aid from the public and from the state: "subscriptions" (akin to a modern bond issue) were sold, and the trustees petitioned for aid from the legislature. The subscription sale was only moderately successful, and the College received no building funds from the state. Nevertheless, a new college building, later named Cushing

For much of the summer, the campus groaned under bulldozers, piles of pipe, and construction debris (left). By August it began to look finished, if unfamiliar: a new curved walk (below) leads from Bagby past Morton to New Commons.

Hall, a Seminary building (Venable Hall), a president's house, and a dining hall were begun in the 1820s.

NOT UNTIL THE 1830s did someone seem to notice that the grounds, too, required improvement. Bradshaw paraphrases Robert Lewis Dabney's remarks about the campus to his sister in 1836: "The environs of the college building [are] an old field full of gullies and weeds, with the cows of the neighborhood grazing to the very windows of the structure, the bells making so much noise that it bothered the students at study." The College, by that time offering a curriculum "equal to any in the South," had its grand, new, Federal-style buildings sitting in a cow pasture. Taking office in 1838, President William Maxwell declared his objectives to "repair thoroughly the buildings, plant fruit and ornamental trees, build walks about the grounds, and make a park of the campus." The first campus renewal plan was born.

In 1989, as in 1776 and again in the 1820s, the greatest obstacle to the amelioration of the College's physical condition proved to be inadequate funding. Put in simple terms, there wasn't enough money. Unlike a publicly mandated and funded institution, a private college must depend heavily on tuition for its operating budget (80% of Hampden-Sydney's budget comes from tuition). Hampden-Sydney's loyal alumni are known for their generosity, but they are few, numbering about 6700. Finally, large gifts to the College many times are designated by the giver to be used for scholarships and educational programs; "bricks and mortar" funding—with the most notable and recent exception of the Carpenter Foundation's generosity—is hard to come by.

Affirming that adequate physical facilities are part—not the most important part, but a vital one—of our mission to educate "good men and good citizens in an atmosphere of sound learning," the Trustees of this College approved a 9.5-million-dollar bond issue in 1989. The funds from it would be used to solve some, though by no means all, of the existing problems. Further, they would be used to create a campus that would be more attractive to visitors and prospective students, also vital in the increasingly competitive world of higher education.

We know how the building projects fared. Thanks in large measure to the generosity of major donors whose gifts are to be recognized publicly later this year, the dining hall-student center begun in 1989 opened officially in March 1991. It contains four dining rooms, two kitchens, two meeting rooms, a 6,670-square-foot student activities center, and a Tiger Inn three times as large as the old one (possessing windows, no less). Built of brick, slate, and cast stone, the plaza between the commons building and Morton Hall provides visitors, students, faculty, and staff a place to meet and talk in the sunshine. In August 1990, seventy students moved into each of the Carpenter residence halls, built with the support of the Carpenter Foundation (see the Winter 1991 Record). The three-story buildings with resident advisor's quarters and a study lounge on each floor filled the urgent need for space in a sophisticated way.

In addition, all construction and repair were done in a way consistent with Hampden-Sydney's identity as a national historic preservation zone. (Many of the College's buildings are Virginia Historic Landmarks: Peshurst, Middlecourt, Venable, Graham, Cushing, Atkinson, College Church, Hampden House, Estcourt, Westmerton, and the Birthplace.) The new Commons and the Carpenter residence halls were given the slate roof, block dentil molding, wood cornices, double-hung windows, and columned porches consistent with the Federal style of architecture that predominates here. The decayed cornices of Johns Auditorium and Bagby, Morton, and Cushing halls were replaced with millwork crafted to duplicate the original exactly. New brick matched existing brickwork. Roofs were replaced or repaired with slate and tin. And, while electricity and plumbing were upgraded to meet current codes, interior restoration—even painting—reproduced as nearly as possible the original decor.

AS THE BUILDINGS were designed to fit their historical context, so landscaping was intended to produce a “natural, historical” look consistent with the College’s identity. Van Yahres, who had designed landscape for Poplar Forest, Jefferson’s “sylvan retreat,” and had evaluated all the major trees at Monticello, seemed to be the man for the job. According to Bill McElway of the Richmond Times-Dispatch, Van Yahres’ 1988 award-winning design for Woodberry Forest School had “rescued” the school’s “arboreal treasure” and “balanced immediate needs with the long-term goal of re-establishing the school’s original landscaping themes”—just what we needed here. Comparing Hampden-Sydney’s campus to Jefferson’s “academical village . . . open, with separate buildings placed in a park-like setting,” Van Yahres recommended scheduled replacement of declining trees; location of walkways, parking lots, and major plantings “to correspond with tree decline”; and redesigning the grounds to reflect the new “center” of campus created by the placement of the new commons and residence halls.

Also embodied in the Van Yahres plan was the “village green” concept that led to the redesign (by Van Yahres and a civil engineer) of the grounds between Graham and Cushing Halls, the largest landscaping project in the history of the College. The asphalt walkways and parking lots at Cushing, Graham, and Morton were torn up. Pristine concrete sidewalks were laid in a new pattern, radiating out from an old millstone in the valley below Cushing, across the brook, and up to the Belltower, Morton, or the Commons. A new walk connects Memorial Gate to the Bell Tower, re-aligning these two structures along their original east-west axis. Pipe-and-post fencing, matching the original fence along College Road, was constructed—by Buildings and Grounds employees—in front of Cushing and around the culvert west of the brook in the bottom.

While the Graham-Cushing Green is now one of the most pleasant areas of the campus, it is also one of the most functional. Underneath the sidewalks and sodding lie water distribution pipes and thousands of feet of fiber-optic cable that link the College’s new telephone and computer networks.

But the new green has also caused the most controversy. It was at least an upbeat kind of dissonance, one born of caring: while few people argued the need for larger, more useful buildings, some were hard-pressed to understand or explain the changes made to our grounds.

The flashpoint came on May 29, 1991, when the Southern Red Oak at the northeast corner of Graham Hall was cut down. According to Van Yahres, the tree had been declining steadily for some time; he had recommended its removal in 1990 because it posed a danger to structures and people around it. But College administrators hesitated to remove it then, cutting it down when they did only because it showed irreparable deterioration.

While the removal of the oak may have had nothing to do with the Green project, its timing was definitely unfortunate. In a town meeting on June 24, those opposed to the tree's destruction argued the wisdom of Van Yahres' judgement. The tree still had leaves; although its center was dead, its outer rings were solid. The tree, some said, did not threaten Graham Hall so much as it threatened the civil engineer's plans for the Green, with its sidewalk that led from Memorial Gate to the Belltower, straight through the site of the tree in question.

Defenders of the trees were also concerned that the heavy machinery was damaging the roots of trees that were left, threatening to kill them too.

In response, Van Yahres explained his "calculus of tree management"—how he decided which trees should be saved and which should not. A tree is rated, he said, by its "potential contribution to a long-range master plan." Criteria include age, height, spread, species desirability (e.g., whether it is appropriate for this locality, or is messy, or fragile), general strength, and appearance. Lower-grade trees are sometimes sacrificed for construction, but they are replaced with more suitable specimens. Van Yahres' guiding principle is that "the way to provide for our grandchildren is to anticipate the decline of certain trees and replace them now. . . . We need to begin planning for the next generation."

While the differences of opinion at first focused on one tree, the residents and employees who came to the town meeting in June felt an urgent need to remind campus planners of the sanctity of all the trees that are our heritage.

Some lines from a 1936 Record article, "Our Campus Trees," convey the strength of their feeling. In the essay, Dr. J. D. Eggleston writes of a giant oak that had died in the spring: "When it was cut down . . . I counted the rings. . . . One does not exaggerate at putting the life of this tree at 250 years. . . . The Mother-Oak had dropped an acorn from one of her outstretching limbs about 1685 [when] this part of the Colony of Virginia was a vast, wooded wilderness . . . of wolves and bears, of deer, of the raccoon and beaver, and of thousands of birds."

The tree at Graham Hall was only 160 years old. Still, it had witnessed the beginnings of Union Theological Seminary, the struggles over slavery and states' rights and the war they led to, the Reconstruction, the end of the one century and the march of Hampden-Sydney students off to the wars of the next. Felling it damaged, somehow, our continuity with the past.

Question-raising at the town meeting brought results. The landscape architect, Van Yahres, and Vice President Krueger set about altering the plans of the civil engineer by making on-site adjustments to allow for tree safety and growth. The proposed Graham Hall driveway was moved six feet to the north to save several trees and avoid damage to others. A part of the walkway north of the dining hall was curved to avoid another tree. Specific injunctions against using heavy machinery near roots or parking under trees were written into construction contracts. Some trees were transplanted to other areas on campus, and trees past saving were replaced with plants already grown to six to eight inches in diameter. In addition, erosion shields were placed at the foot of banks and around ditches to prevent soil depletion by runoff.

The controversy over the Graham Hall oak symbolizes the larger issue of the College's struggle to achieve a fine balance between preserving the past and preparing for the future. Those who objected to the tree's removal were not demanding stasis but reminding administrators to exercise caution in effecting change. And those who modified the campus renewal plan showed the sensitivity and flexibility vital to sound planning for future growth.

MENDING CRACKED walls, replacing dying trees, laying new foundations, and replanting repeat the eternal cycle of physical decline, renewal, and growth necessary to any living entity. We, like our predecessors, the founders and the builders, have taken our turn in assuring that the physical college not only survives but thrives. The cost lessens when we remember that with each renewal comes the reaffirmation of our original purpose. For over two centuries, this College has been building, rebuilding, and growing, but it will continue to enrich, as it always has, the hearts and minds of young men, who carry the spirit of this place with them when they go out into the world. Long after once-new walls have fallen and saplings have matured, the idea that is Hampden-Sydney will remain.

Taking on Eastern Europe's Befouled Environment

By Frederic L. Smith '92

THE POLISH GOVERNMENT makes Silesian schoolchildren take a two-week vacation every year, but the children do not go to the beach or summer camp. Instead, they travel to Northern Poland to clear their lungs of lead and sulfur dioxide emissions. The soil around Silesia contains nine grams of lead per kilogram of soil, and thirty-five percent of the schoolchildren show signs of lead poisoning.

The environmental problems of Silesia, Poland, are just one example of the obstacles that Dr. Kenneth Townsend, Associate Professor and Chair of the Economics Department at Hampden-Sydney College, faced when he led a People-to-People team of engineers and economists, representing academia and industry, to Poland, Czechoslovakia, and the former Soviet Union. The delegation met with groups like Poland's Atomic Energy Commission, the Moscow City Council, and the Czech Academy of Sciences, attempting to devise economically feasible strategies for cleaning up the staggering legacy of contamination left behind by communist regimes.

For Townsend, an environmental economist, the trip was the culmination of recent research on environmental policy in command economies. Along with Herman Daly, a noted economist, Townsend has been working on a book that will be published by MIT Press this year. The book focuses on pollution's retarding economic effects and the ways to mobilize a command economy for clean-up. The trip was also like a "living laboratory," after his studies on environmental economics at the Central School for Planning and Statistics.

His expertise and extensive preparation could not, however, prepare him for the severe pollution he would see in Eastern Europe. Townsend wrote that Eastern Europe, in many regions, is "a harrowing scene of landscape, now deceptively green with the crops of late summer, contaminated with heavy metals, such as lead and cadmium, with radioactive fallout, and with incredibly high levels of deposits of the oxides of sulphur and nitrogen from the smokestacks of industry."

Marxist governments are largely to blame for this contamination, beginning with Stalin's Five-Year Plans in the 1930s that called for heavy investments in large-scale industry. Unfortunately, heavy industry under communist rule failed to produce enough profit to invest in new machinery, so that, as Townsend remarked, "the excessive drive to boost the output of heavy industry—steel, concrete, chemicals—has come at the expense of modern, less polluting equipment." Additionally, communist regimes have simply not recognized pollution, or blamed its effects on Western capitalism.

ONLY IN THE LAST FEW years, as communist governments have buckled to massive social resistance and capitalistic reforms, has the Pandora's box of environmental problems been opened in Eastern Europe. Townsend noted that forty-eight percent of the river water in Poland is unfit even for industrial cooling applications and that the Polish tourist agency recommends that travelers limit their stay in Krakow to three days because the air is so contaminated. Although the problem seems particularly acute in Poland, it is also serious in Czechoslovakia. In Czechoslovakia and the Soviet Union, the primary source of pollution is the widespread burning of high-sulphur brown coal, lignite.

Cleaning up this environmental mess is especially vexing in command (centrally-controlled, socialist) economies. The Catch-22 is that capital-starved Eastern European countries depend on the very industries that produce most of the pollution for the hard currency that is needed for the technology to control pollution.

Economic reforms aimed at creating a market (supply-demand) economy will, of course, facilitate the clean-up process. Townsend observed that the Soviet Union has the least reformed economy, while Poland, under Lech Walesa's tutelage, has seen the most changes. Czechoslovakia, Townsend said, is somewhere in between.

But Townsend and his colleagues helped to articulate more specific solutions. First, his group told government officials to focus on sulfur-dioxide emissions, not on soil contamination. Curbing the use of high-sulphur coal would be the most cost-effective way to reduce pollution. The group also emphasized the practice of using government-issued permits to allow firms to emit contaminants to a certain point, but would require them to treat any emissions beyond that limit. Until Eastern European governments create environmental protection agencies with police power, however, these recommendations cannot be very effective.

Townsend noted that another efficient clean-up option is "ecological debt swapping" with Western creditors. Currently, Sweden is exploring a plan whereby Eastern European countries invest in pollution control equipment in exchange for the remission of debts. This policy seems especially beneficial for countries like Sweden, which are affected by Eastern Europe's pollution.

As to the magnitude of the problem in Eastern Europe, Townsend admits current clean-up efforts may yield little in the short term. Yet Eastern Europe's pleas for environmental help to experts like Townsend suggest that progress is on the horizon. Townsend said, "The primary good our group accomplished was to demonstrate the efficiencies of market economies that let pollution abatement [methods] occur at the least cost."

Outdated technology, like Moscow's thirties-era sewage settling ponds (left) threaten the environment of Eastern Europe, as does the pollution from burning high-sulfur brown coal—the white limestone exterior of St. Vitus' Cathedral in Prague, Czechoslovakia (whose interior is shown above) was cleaned only five years ago but is already grimy black again.

"Silicon Hill": Hampden-Sydney Comes of Computer Age

By Matthew Karnitschnig '94

AS PART OF ITS EFFORT to modernize operations in an increasingly competitive college market, and as a response to the growing number of personal computers around the campus, Hampden-Sydney recently commissioned a state-of-the-art telecommunications system. The new system, largely implemented this past summer, boasts a wide scope of improvements to voice and data communications, administrative computing, academic computing, and cable television.

Perhaps the most apparent change on campus is the revamped telephone system, which became active July 1. Over three miles of in-ground cabling was installed throughout the College in order to serve the new telephone and computer system for the 200 faculty and staff members and 950 students.

"Everyone has been very pleased about it," said Gerry Pettus, switchboard operator.

The old system was a Digital 1201 PBX. Installed in the early 1970s, its major limitation was that all calls to and between faculty and staff had to be routed through a central switchboard. This requirement restricted the hours of operation and hampered the ability of faculty and staff to obtain local and long distance lines. In addition, the equipment for the system was no longer in production, making the availability of spare parts and trained technicians uncertain.

Consequently, the trustees decided that a change was needed, and Hampden-Sydney is now serviced by a Northern Telecom "Meridian 1" phone system. The cost for this new system and its cabling was around $690,000.

A consulting firm hired by the College to assess the situation, however, projected that the revenues the system will produce over the next ten years will make it a "no-cost project."

It was in the 1880s that President Richard McIlwaine had Hampden-Sydney's first telephone installed in his house. Students were not permitted to use it, however. If he wanted to use a telephone, a student would walk to the store on College Road, which also housed one of the then new-fangled contraptions.

Not before the 1950s did our students have even the luxury of pay telephones in the residence halls.

In 1964, Tiger columnist J. M. Reid called for the administration to put telephones in every student's room. Something, he said, needed to be done about the "troublesome pay telephones."

"How many times have you tried to make a phone call and have had to wait for your turn—which comes an hour later?" he asked. "How often would you have liked to talk just a little longer but did not have the exact change?"

Reid's wish did not come true in 1964, but several years later

*Hampden-Sydney's Publications Office led the way not only at Hampden-Sydney but among Virginia colleges by adopting desktop publishing technology to produce its projects, beginning in 1984. students were finally given the option of having a telephone in their rooms.

Now, twenty-some years later, this first system has been replaced. A century after the College bought its first telephone, Hampden-Sydney is once again on the cutting edge of telecommunications technology.

The benefits of the Meridian 1 system for faculty and staff include 24-hour direct-dial service to every faculty, staff, and student phone on campus, ready availability of local and long-distance lines, and a feature which only a few years ago would have seemed wholly futuristic—voice-mail, essentially an answering machine without the machine. Every student and faculty and staff member has his or her own "mailbox" in which messages can be left and a five-digit code with which to retrieve them.

In the old system, students had 24-hour phone service—if they ordered a phone from the local telephone company. Now, however, in addition to voice-mail and new phones, they no longer have to deal with multiple vendors; the College now handles all installation (is, in effect, its own telephone company) and has a contract with Sprint to serve the long-distance needs of everyone on campus.

ANOTHER ADVANTAGE of Hampden-Sydney's new telecommunications system is that it allows for an integrated computer network, since the telephone cable can transmit computer data as well as voice signals.

What this means for students is that a paper they write on a computer in their rooms can be electronically transmitted to the computer in their professor's office. And once the library's catalogue is put on computer, students will also be able to look up library books and sort through periodicals indices from terminals in their rooms.

Many students—according to one administrator, between a half and a third of them—own a personal computer, most of them Apple Macintoshes, because the College has a favorable purchasing agreement with Apple Corporation, which has significantly reduced the cost of machines (see accompanying profile of Dr. Ray Gaskins, who started the MacCraze at Hampden-Sydney). The College owns 175 more Macs for student use, spread around campus but concentrated in a lab on the second floor of Venable Hall and in the new computer center in the basement of Johns Auditorium, which can accommodate 45 users.

At the same time the new telephone cable was installed, so was fibre-optic cabling, connecting thirteen of the main administrative and academic buildings on campus and allowing data bases and other files to be shared between computer terminals and the new Digital Equipment Corporation VAX 4000 supermini computer.

Fibre-optic data transmission is a relatively new technology that uses rays of light to send information over hair-thin glass fibres at blinding speeds. The fibre wire provides a greater carrying capacity than copper telephone cable, is immune to frequency interference, and has an increased transmission security.

And because fibre-optic communication relies on light instead of electricity, it is impervious to lightning strikes.

Installed over the summer, the VAX supermini computer is the true centerpiece of the College's new computing system. Coupled with the integrated network and a new software package, the VAX promises to serve Hampden-

Sydney's computing needs into the 21st century.

The VAX replaced an 11-year-old Perkin-Elmer mainframe computer. According to Steve Davis, Director of Computing, the change has made administrative computing more efficient.

"It was needed to eliminate redundancy among Admissions, the Business Office, Development and External Affairs, Student Records, and Dean of Students and to enable the current staff to efficiently serve our growing campus community," he said. "For example, each of these areas keeps computer records of our students. Many of these data bases are exactly the same, but could not be shared electronically." Each office had to maintain its own version of the files, a duplication which was not only unnecessary but which prevented everyone from having access to the information.

Probably the most dramatic example of how the new system will make a difference is the office of development and external affairs, which uses 80% of the Perkin-Elmer's time.

"We are really excited about it," said Sherry Womack, who handles computing and data management for the development office. "The VAX and its new specialized software will provide capability for data management and presentation we've never had before."

The development office staff know firsthand the benefits of the new system, since they had to deal with primitive equipment for so long.

"When I arrived on campus in 1989," recalls Don Keel, vice president for development and external affairs, "all my department had were a bunch of old memory typewriters and two borrowed Macs." Thanks to the foresightedness of two anonymous trustees, who were aghast at the tools with which the fund-raising staff was managing to get the job done, first the development office and later the publications office were able to get on the computer network bandwagon before the great campus-wide cabling push of 1991. A local area network allowed officers to share data, drafts, and messages. "Our capacity to reach donors in a timely manner and to prepare reports from up-to-the-minute information took a quantum leap overnight," Keel said.

Now the new network and central computer are opening doors for the development office. In order to relieve cramped quarters and to make way for the business office's move to Cabell House, the various elements of the office of development and external affairs are moving into four separate locations. "Physical separation like this simply would not be possible without the total communications network of the VAX, in concert with our Mac local area network," Keel said. "But with this system, we'll hardly notice it."

Ray Gaskins: Present at the creation of our computer age

Ray Gaskins says he "simply fell into" computer technology when he was an undergraduate math major at Virginia Tech in 1961—when, mind you, we were just beginning to hear the word "binary," when IBMs took up whole rooms, and each line of a program had to be punched onto a separate card. He was helping an instructor work out a statistics program—on about 2,000 cards—when he realized the idea of computers "looked kinda neat." So he wrote his own program.

When he came to Hampden-Sydney in 1970 to teach math and computer science, Gaskins found the management of information not much more efficient than it had been at Tech ten years before: students, professors, and office personnel had to stand in line, hands full of batches of punch cards, to use an IBM 1130 that took up about 45 square feet of floor space. The SIS (Student Information System) used for student registration required 75 programs and sometimes caused the computer to "bomb out." Keeping good programmers was also a problem. As Gaskins says, if they were "too good," everybody else wanted them.

So, in 1974, Gaskins decided that "it was up to me to step in and take over—and I did." He immediately began to rewrite the SIS. Even more pressing than the software problem, however, was the age of the 1130. Gaskins knew from experience that it would be only a short time before IBM stopped producing parts for the old machine and servicing its hardware.

In 1980, thanks to a substantial gift from J. B. Fuqua for a new computing center, the College was able to purchase the Perkin-Elmer 3240 mainframe, a "rugged and reliable" model exactly like those that run the space shuttle simulator at Goddard Space Center. There was little danger of obsolescence: as for all equipment used by the federal government, Perkin-Elmer parts and service had to be available for ten years.

At about the time that the College was beginning to make full use of the PE 3240, the world of information technology exploded with the advent of the personal computer. IBM introduced its PC in 1981 and Apple began selling its Macintosh in 1984, but neither could keep up with demand. Gaskins, who says "making deals is in my blood," was undaunted when he learned that other people at other places were standing in line to get one machine within six months of their order. He made a few phone calls (including one to Apple, Inc., headquarters) and secured an agreement for 81 computers with a 20% discount and guaranteed delivery within 90 days.

Gaskins made another deal with Apple in 1990, this time after Apple approached him. Having noticed his record resale of used Macintoshes, Apple asked him to join the Higher Education Purchase Program, a plan that would allow at least 50% discount on new hardware and as much as 80% on software. Seeing the advantages of lower prices for the College, Gaskins took them up on their offer.

Selling and buying computers was simply a way for Gaskins to fulfill his vision for Hampden-Sydney—"a computer on every desktop." But even as his entrepreneurship has allowed the College to keep up with developing technology and to do it at low cost, Gaskins has done more than make MacDeals and teach mathematics and computer science. He has won awards for research from Hampden-Sydney College and the Virginia Academy of Science and written a dozen papers and more than 20 articles. More important, especially for those of us who five years ago didn't know a megabyte was not an orthodontic disease, he has guided us through the increasingly complex field of information technology.

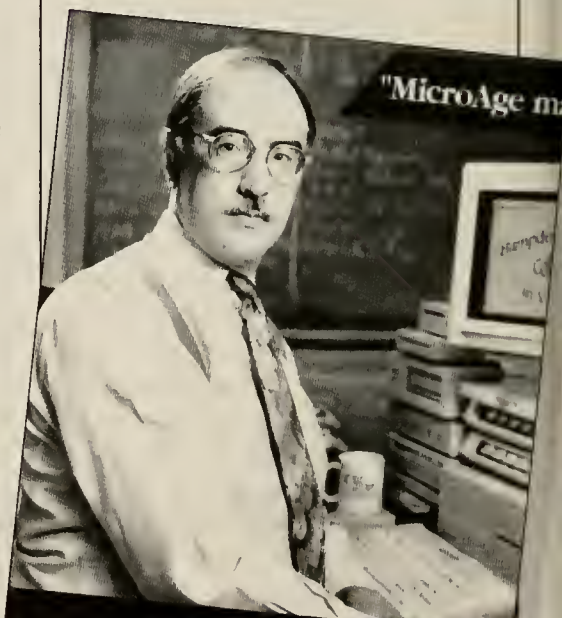

Because of his experience with the IBM 1130, Gaskins began to plan for a new system long before the old one became too costly to maintain and repair or parts became unavailable. In 1987 he and Paul Baker (now Associate Dean of Academic Administration) announced the formal plan for replacing the Perkin-Elmer, alerting administrators and trustees to the dangers of working with an antiquated mainframe. As a result, a new computer—and a whole new telephone-computing network to support it—were placed at the top of the list of priorities in the College's Strategic Plan.

What's next for Ray Gaskins, now that we have a computer on almost every desktop, a new mainframe (properly called a "super-mini" nowadays), and the technology he has dreamed about for twenty years?

"FDDI" is his prompt reply. That's Fiber Distributed Data Interface, a high-speed networking system for fiber-optics with about ten times our present capacity and, more important, a systems-management capability that will monitor traffic on the network and pinpoint failures in the system.

"Now" says Gaskins, "if we only had five or six million more. . . ."

Memorial Gate Rededicated

At the eleventh hour of the eleventh day of the eleventh month, a small group from the community gathered in College Church to re-dedicate the War Memorial Gate. The skies were overcast, threatening rain, much as they had in 1921 when the cornerstone for the gate was laid.

The group sang "My Country 'Tis of Thee," just as in 1921—when, after the earth-shattering barbarism of World War I, alumni and friends of Hampden-Sydney erected the memorial to those who had died in that war, in the hope that there would be no more war.

In his most reverent and dignified Southern tones, the Reverend William Thompson told of that original hope, lost now and for ever. And he told of his idea, growing since the eve of the Gulf War, to add to the Gate the names of all Hampden-Sydney students who had lost their lives in our country's wars. "When it comes to war," he said, "there are no minor conflicts, and each man who dies is still a child of God."

Under Mr. Thompson's direction, the World War II plaque was moved from the east end of Graham Hall to the Memorial Gate, and new plaques commemorating lives lost in the Civil War (83), the Spanish-American War (2), the

During the ceremony, Mr. Thompson brought to life some of the names inscribed in the cold bronze: John T. Thornton, Class of 1842, whose widow received a visit from Robert E. Lee forty-eight hours before the surrender at Appomattox; Isaac P. Armstrong, who died at the College after being wounded in Sharpsburg, Tennessee, and whose epitaph in the Seminary Cemetery reads, "Died while defending his state from a ruthless invasion"; Ned Langhorne, Class of 1860 (the student who had murdered his fellow student over an "affair of honor"), died of disease, not of gunshot wounds; Ned Pasco, Class of 1895, who, fighting in the Philippines during the Spanish-American War, was captured by aboriginal headhunters, beheaded, boiled, and eaten; Lee Tait '15, who was wounded in France on November 11, 1918, about 15 minutes before the Armistice was signed, and died the next day; and David Wilson '38, son of professor and dean David C. Wilson, and G. B. Williams '44, son of the pastor of College Church, who both died in World War II. And on and on.

The final prayer was in Rudyard Kipling's words:

*The tumult and the shouting dies;
The captains and the kings depart;
Still stands Thine ancient sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart.*

"As we rededicate this memorial, we offer a prayer," said the historian-minister, "that there will never be any more names added to any more plaques. The Memorial should be called the 'Peace Memorial,' because these young men died not for war but for the hope of peace."

Kniffen Talks About Desire for Excellence, President Presents Awards At Fall Convocation

Affirming the College's mission to "form good men and good citizens in an atmosphere of sound learning," President Rossum presented awards to students demonstrating academic excellence at Fall Convocation on November 19th. The College seeks to recognize, he said, "students whose academic achievement and leadership traits remind us of this mission."

Dr. Donald A. Kniffen, Adjunct Associate Professor of Physics at Hampden-Sydney and an astrophysicist at NASA's Goddard Space Flight Center for over thirty years, was the featured speaker.

In his talk entitled "Astronomy: The Ageless Quest," Kniffen challenged members of the audience to reflect on the achievements of the student award winners by posing the question, "What reward motivates the quest for excellence?" He dismissed temporal rewards like money, power, and glory, concluding that the reward is intangible and rests in "the satisfaction we get from setting high standards."

Astronomers, Kniffen observed, earn "intangibles" in seeking to understand individual bodies outside our world. He reminded the audience of the rich tradition of astronomical inquiry stretching back to the builders of Stonehenge and including great thinkers like Aristotle, Newton, and Einstein. Current research, Kniffen noted, proves that astronomy is "alive and exciting, but, at the same time, standing on the shoulders of those inquiring minds who started the search so long ago."

Kniffen remarked that while the "internal desire for excellence" continues in all fields, outstanding students must continue to nurture the quest to ensure its vitality. As an analogy, he alluded to the current debate over how the common man benefits from the construction of space observatories.

Granting that these projects consume large amounts of resources, Kniffen defended their existence. Abandoning projects like this, he said, demonstrates that we are no longer willing to pursue excellence, no longer willing to compete with the ancient builders or great thinkers.

In closing, Kniffen challenged the award winners to think about the legacy of intellectual inquiry as its own reward, "to take the baton, and to carry it to the next generation with a little more luster than it had when you received it here today."

Receiving awards were

- Todd Moose, a senior English, history, and Spanish major from Taylorsville, North Carolina, received the President's Award for Academic Excellence. This award is given annually to the senior with the highest grade-point average in his class.

- McAlister Marshall II, a senior religion major from Richmond, received the President's Award for Overall Academic Excellence in the Humanities.

- Mahdi M. Abu-Omar, a senior chemistry major from Arlington, received the President's Award for Academic Excellence in the Natural Sciences.

- Paul Monroe Brinegar II, a junior physics and math/computer science major from Leesburg, won the Samuel S. Jones Phi Beta Kappa Award. He holds the second-highest grade-point average in the Junior Class.

- George M. Howe III, of Belmont, North Carolina, received the President's Award for Scholarship and Character.

- Seth S. Joyner, a sophomore from Jacksonville, Florida, and Jason K. S. Porter, a sophomore from Hurt, Virginia, share the Omicron Delta Kappa Scholarship Award. The award is based on the achievement and leadership potential they demonstrated as freshmen.

- Tanja Schiffer, a junior from Hampden-Sydney, won the Samuel S.

On one side are those who say women thrive in an environment designed for them, pointing out that a third of the women in boardrooms of Fortune 500 companies and half the women in Congress are graduates of all-women's colleges.

Gala Homecoming Brings Alumni Back to Campus

Homecoming weekend began on Friday afternoon, October 18th, with victory for the Class of 1953 in the Thompson Cup Challenge, the annual tennis match named in honor of Professor Graves H. Thompson.

On Friday evening, the Classes of 1951, 1966, 1971, and 1981 gathered at Hampden-Sydney, while the classes of 1956, 1961, 1976, and 1986 got together at the Jefferson Hotel in Richmond.

In the Fourteenth Annual H-SC Alumni 10-K Race, run on Saturday morning, Jim Alexander '80 had the best time overall and also placed first in the 30s age group. Kevin Martin-Gayle '88 finished first of the 20-29 year-olds; Christopher Jackson '92, first in the under-21 age group; David Martin '73, first in the 40-49 year-olds; and Jim Hickey, first in the 50 and over age group. Linda Mason was first in the women's category.

Johnny Ellis '70, Alumni Association President, convened Saturday morning's general meeting and presented to J. Harrison Hancock '38 the Alumni Citation for his loyal and unselfish work for the College Museum and in alumni affairs in Northern Virginia. Mr. Hancock, who at Hampden-Sydney was a Garnet staff member and president of the Union-Philanthropic Literary Society, was elected to Phi Beta Kappa, and graduated as valedictorian of his class, worked for several years as editorial assistant for The Commonwealth, a magazine published by the Virginia Chamber of Commerce. He was a Navy Reservist in the Pacific during World War II. Following the war, he earned his Master's degree in Mathematics and went to work for the National Bureau of Standards, where he remained until he retired in 1974. Since then, he has been actively involved in alumni affairs, as a charter member of the Northern Virginia Area Alumni-Admissions Program for fifteen years and as a "backbone" member of the Washington, D.C., alumni club, serving as its secretary and treasurer at different times for over twelve years.

Later, the Class of 1966 celebrated its 25th reunion in a special way by purchasing a portrait of Patrick Henry, created and contributed by class member and Richmond artist Louis Briel, at the noon-time silent auction and then donating the painting and the $5500 gained from its sale to the Annual Fund.

After the traditional lunch on Hampden House lawn, the crowd watched as the Tigers easily and soundly defeated the Generals of Washington & Lee.

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION OFFICERS 1991 - 1993

At the May 1991 general meeting of the Hampden-Sydney Alumni Association, John C. Ellis '70 (above center) was elected President, W. David Paxton '76 (right) Vice President, and Donald P. Whitley '59 (left) Secretary. Johnny Ellis became a chartered life underwriter in 1980 and is a life insurance agent with Commonwealth Financial Group, Virginia Beach. He lives in Virginia Beach with his wife Janet, who is a systems analyst for Metro Information Systems, and his daughter, Mary Virginia. David Paxton received his J.D. from the University of Virginia in 1980 and is an attorney and partner in the firm of Gentry, Locke, Rakes & Moore in Roanoke. He and his wife, Victoria, have two children. Don Whitley (whose twin brother, Tyler, also graduated in 1959) is a stockbroker with Paine Webber in Richmond. He and his wife, Laura, have two children.

Alumni College Scores A Big Hit Once Again

For the second year in a row, the Alumni College, held on campus from June 7 to 9, 1991, drew rave reviews. Jay Robbins '51 of Fredericksburg, wrote, "Thanks for an intellectually stimulating and creature-comfort-enjoyable time. All the way home we kept thinking of questions we wanted to ask. I hope it works out for us to repeat next year." Bobby Bray '60 of Portsmouth, wrote, "I can't tell you how much it means to get back on the Hill for such an occasion. I came away, once again, impressed with the caliber of professors that we have there." And finally from W. D. Temple '37 of Petersburg: "Frances and I thoroughly enjoyed the Alumni College. We were fortunate to have such knowledgeable and capable presenters during the weekend, and it was also delightful to become acquainted with other alumni and their guests as well as those on the program."

Iraq and the Persian Gulf Crisis the theme of this year's Alumni College, attracted distinguished lecturers: Lieutenant General Samuel V. Wilson, former Director of the Defense Intelligence Agency and an adjunct professor of political science at Hampden-Sydney; General Robert C. Kingston, the first Commander-in-Chief of the U. S. Central Command, which includes the Middle East; Brigadier General Carroll Thackston, Assistant Adjutant General of the Virginia National Guard; Dr. James Y. Simms, Jr., professor of history at Hampden-Sydney; Dr. Ralph S. Hattox, assistant professor of history at Hampden-Sydney; and Dr. Ronald L. Heine-mann, Squires Professor of history at Hampden-Sydney.

In the opening session on Friday evening following cocktails and dinner in the College's new dining hall, Generals Wilson and Kingston examined the situation in the Middle East and the background of events leading up to the crisis. On Saturday morning General Kingston gave a slide presentation of the history of the U.S. Central Command, in which he played a significant role, setting it up and serving as its first Commander-in-Chief. Brigadier General Thackston then explained the role of the National Guard and Reserves in the Gulf Crisis.

During lunch, the Alumni College group was entertained by students of the Hampden-Sydney Music Festival before a tour of the Appomattox Historical Park led by Civil War historian Ron Heinemann. The remainder of the afternoon was free for the group, who lodged in one of the College's new dormitory units during their two-night stay. After dinner

(during which everyone marveled at the beauty of the new dining hall and high quality of the food) the group capped the day by attending a Music Festival artist concert.

After a bountiful breakfast on Sunday morning in the Parents & Friends Lounge, Hampden-Sydney history professors Jim Simms and Ralph Hattox captivated the audience with a analysis of how the history of the Middle East and its peoples led to the Crisis.

John Waters '58, Director of Alumni Relations, whose office organizes the Alumni College, said, "Once again the Alumni College received high marks from both alumni and faculty participants. They were enthusiastic about its content, thoroughly enjoyed the give and take in the discussions and question-and-answer sessions. The new dining hall and the social activities were also big hits. Having time to relax and enjoy the College setting over a weekend is a real enticement to participate in such a program. We hope to build upon this success in the future."

Plan now to attend the next Alumni College on June 5-7, 1992.
The topic will be
"The End of Communism."
Mark these dates on your calendar and be on the information in the mail.

Samuel Davies' Polegreen Church marked for posterity

A Virginia Historical Marker now marks the site of Polegreen Church in Hanover county, thanks to the efforts of the Reverend Robert Bluford '45.

The church, which no longer exists (thanks in this instance to the finer sensibilities of the Yankee invaders who burnt it like firewood in 1864), was the center of the first major victory for religious freedom in Virginia, a struggle which inspired James Madison and Thomas Jefferson 25 years later to write laws guaranteeing citizens the freedom to worship in whatever manner they chose.

When some citizens of Hanover County, eager to worship outside the "deadening and restrictive bounds of the established Anglican Church," asked the Presbytery of New Castle (Delaware) to send them a preacher, Samuel Davies came in 1747. At that time there were Presbyterians safely across the mountains, but none so near the heart of the colonial government. Davies undertook what would be a twelve-year battle to gain recognition for his congregation's right to exist; his gradual victory is reflected in Polegreen's descriptions, which changed over the years from Reading House to Meeting House and finally Church.

There is of course a Hampden-Sydney connection, a vital one: in 1755 Samuel Davies founded Hanover Presbytery, the first south of the Potomac. And it was Hanover Presbytery which decided in 1774 to establish a college of its own—Hampden-Sydney—as an alternative to the schools run by the government.

Mr. Bluford heads the Historic Polegreen Church Foundation, which has been instrumental in preserving the site, undertaking archaeological excavations, and preparing interpretative exhibits.

Visiting Executives Tell Students about Changes and Challenges of World Markets

JOHN SNOW, President, CEO, and Chairman of the Board of CSX Corporation, visited the College on Monday, September 16, 1991. CSX Corporation, the product of a merger of the Chessie System and Seaboard Railroads in 1980, is an international transportation services company headquartered in Richmond. In 1990, the company had an operating revenue of over eight billion dollars, employing 51,000 people and conducting business in 150 countries.

Describing the drastic changes American industry has experienced in the past twenty years, Mr. Snow noted in particular that since 1980 the number of railroad industry employees has dropped from 500,000 to 180,000. Other businesses have had to cut out layers of management and concentrate more on customers' needs. As a result, he said, "today we are seeing a clear renaissance in American industry," in which efficiency and service are equally balanced as driving factors.

In 1986, CSX responded to these market changes by diversifying its operations from rail-based transport to include ocean container shipping, inland barging, warehousing, real estate, and resorts. It also restructured its management hierarchy and broke up old businesses into entrepreneurial units. These smaller entities make management more accountable for its decisions.

Mr. Snow praised the effects of deregulation, saying that, under strict regulation, corporations experience non-entrepreneurial changes which are not efficient. With deregulation, though, the concept of quality has been rejuvenated, demanding accountability from employees at all levels. He emphasized that the impetus for deregulation, management restructuring, and increased quality is the entrepreneur. By continually advancing better ideas, entrepreneurs keep markets in perpetual change in a kind of "creative destruction." This entrepreneurial spirit must be nurtured if American industry hopes to keep pace in the global economy.

Liberal Arts colleges like Hampden-Sydney prepare students best to face these constant changes, Mr. Snow said. By exposing students to a broad curriculum, a liberal education produces someone who has a stable foundation and is equipped to handle the change that is inherent in business.

On October 28, RAYMOND W. SMITH, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of the Bell Atlantic Corporation, told the Entrepreneurship Society that doing business in a global economy requires stretching beyond the micro- and macro-economics of the classroom. Most CEOs spend the better part of their time in what Smith calls a "mesocosm," a large institutional structure that mediates between the microcosm and macrocosm.

At best, organizations in this mesocosm will streamline transactions between the individual and society, fulfilling customers' needs and social requirements. All too often, however, many act as barriers—bloated bureaucratic structures that interfere with the delivery of a product to customers.

When corporations become lethargic, they face what Mr. Smith characterized as "the Boiled Frog Syndrome": a frog dropped into boiling water will immediately jump out, scalded but alive. If, on the other hand, the frog is put into lukewarm water, it will stay there, even as the water temperature is slowly increased. Unaware of the gradual change, it will die. Mr. Smith applied the "boiled frog" metaphor to American corporations that have failed to respond to Japanese innovation and other changes in the world market. The solution, he said, is "to learn to act before the water gets too hot," to create "an organization with the desire, the reflexes, and the muscle to stay a jump ahead of externally-induced crises." Doing so, however, requires re-evaluation and redesign of systems and processes.

Bell Atlantic's "boiling water" was the divestiture of the Bell System. As a result of the break-up, Bell Atlantic learned to create "an organization with the capacity for change"—the Bell Atlantic Way seminars and quality improvement process. Through the program, the corporation's executives learned to enlist employees in changing behavioral standards in its offices and staying in touch with the strategic issues that affect the telecommunications industry.

The nature of leadership, Mr. Smith said, has in the last several decades undergone a major change. It has become a "function—not of position and power, but of knowledge and trust."

On December 3, RICHARD G. HOLDER, President and Chief Operating Officer of Reynolds Metals Company, told the Entrepreneurship Society about Reynolds' efforts to counter the double blow of a global economic recession and a surplus of aluminum in the world market.

Alluding to the company's founder,

R. S. Reynolds, Mr. Holder said that "entrepreneurs make choices based on risk evaluation." R. S. Reynolds, he said, was an entrepreneur in the truest sense because he started small and built a billion-dollar operation with hard work, imagination, and risk-taking. Reynolds Metals, now a global company with over 100 operations in twenty countries and employing nearly 31,000 people, has $6 billion in sales. Best known for its household foil wrap, the company is also a leader in aluminum can production and recycling, a producer of flexible containers, and an exporter of precious metals.

The ability to make intelligent choices based on calculated risks has proved an essential skill in the aluminum industry recently; in addition to the current recession, the former Soviet Union, which desperately needed hard currency, more than tripled its aluminum exports, creating a surplus in world markets. In response, Reynolds Metals decided to close four of its seven smelters in the United States, abandon unprofitable enterprises, and cut one-third of its employees. The company streamlined its overseas operations and its precious metal enterprises and modernized its aluminum recycling facilities. As it made cuts, Reynolds concentrated its resources in more potentially profitable areas.

Mr. Holder emphasized that although the cost-cutting and restructuring were dictated by the need to be profitable in a recession year, environmental and humanitarian issues would increasingly influence company policy in future. Annually, their nationwide program recycles more cans than they produce. As part of its overseas expansion, Reynolds is building a plant in the former Soviet Union—not to compete with but to aid the Commonwealth's economy. The soundest way to help the Russians solve their economic problems is to develop their domestic markets; and better aluminum containers (which the Russians export and do not keep for themselves) will also help to improve their food distribution systems.

Nothing assures survival in today's business climate, Mr. Holder said, but "a liberal arts background, from my perspective, will provide you a foundation which will enable you to make intelligent decisions."

Deis Receives Mednick Award for Work on George Meredith

Dr. Elizabeth J. Deis, Assistant Professor of Rhetoric and Humanities, was awarded a Virginia Foundation for Independent Colleges Mednick Fellowship in April 1991 for her proposal to publish a collection of George Meredith's short fiction.

Such a collection of the "important and innovative" nineteenth-century author's shorter pieces, never before published, will make those works available to the general reading public, provide material for scholars studying theories of fiction, and serve as a basis for undergraduate studies in short fiction, Victorian literature, or women's studies.

Dr. Deis, who has been studying the work of George Meredith since 1980, has published articles in The South Atlantic Quarterly, the Dictionary of Literary Biography, and other periodicals. She received her M.A. and Ph.D. in English from Duke University, specializing in Victorian literature.

Established in 1967 by the family of the late Maurice L. Mednick of the Globe Construction Company of Norfolk, the Mednick fellowships are awarded yearly to members of VFIC college faculties. For more than two decades, the fund has helped more than 200 scholars whose projects are judged worthy of support.

Faculty Activity

Hassell Simpson (English) published an article, "A Butcher's Thumb: Oral-Digital Consciousness in The Big Sleep and Other Novels by Raymond Chandler," in the June issue of the Journal of Popular Culture. The essay originated in a Mellon Seminar led by Peter J. Rabinowitz, and became a convention paper at the 1988 APA-PCA meeting in New Orleans. In October, he played Duncan in Shakespeare's Macbeth at Longwood College. The performance marked his twenty-sixth appearance on Virginia stages. Other Shakespearean credits of his include Malvolio in Twelfth Night at Longwood and Leonato in Much Ado About Nothing with the Shakespeare Players, Inc., outdoors at Byrd Park, Richmond.

David Lewis (Fine Arts) spent the early portion of last summer on two major projects, a series of large drawings he calls "Beach" and the compilation of a small catalogue entitled "David Dodge Lewis: Drawings from Four Series (the second with the aid of a Hampden-Sydney summer fellowship grant)." David also won Best in Show and Excellence in Drawing awards at the NPVAG National Juried Exhibition in Nebraska, and at the GRACE Gallery show in Reston, Virginia. He held a one-person show at Brevard Junior College in September and participated in group shows at Wake Forest University in October and at the University of Nebraska/Lincoln in November. Also in October, he delivered a lecture, "Art and God: The Myth of the Artist as Idiot-Savant," as part of Hampden-Sydney's honors lecture series.

George Bagby (English) completed the revision of Frost and the Book of Nature, the manuscript he had been working on during his spring sabbatical leave, and submitted it to a university press in September. Twentieth Century Literature accepted for publication "The Promethean Frost," the essay he wrote under a Hampden-Sydney summer research grant in 1987. In May, Bagby attended the third annual conference of the American Literature Association in Washington and in July read his paper, "The Temptations of Pathfinder: Cooper's Radical Analysis of Ownership" at the eighth biennial James Fenimore Cooper Seminar at the State University College of New York in Oneonta.

Nancy Rose (Modern Languages) spent last summer at the University Research Library of UCLA, after presenting a paper on the two principal words for bear in Indo-European languages at an Indo-European Conference in California. Last fall, Rose flew to Fort Worth, Texas, to deliver a paper on heraldry at a conference of the South Central Modern Language Association. The talk, part of a session organized by the International Courtly Literature Society, was entitled "Coats of Arms: Heraldic Animals and the Wearing of Skins."

Last summer marked Mary Saunders's (English) fifth year as a reader of Advance Placement essays for the College Board in Princeton. After her return from New Jersey, she made some additions to her "Dickens and Film" survey article, which she hopes to have published early next year. Her article on Dickens's floor scenes, published in Dramatic Dickens, received favorable notice in a Victorian Studies review that praised the entire book. (The article grew out of work originally funded in part by a Hampden-Sydney travel and summer research grant.)

With combined funding from a Hampden-Sydney research grant, the National Endowment for the Humanities, and a Virginia Foundation for Independent Colleges Mednick Grant, Elizabeth Deis (Rhetoric and Humanities) was able to spend two months last summer at Yale's libraries researching George Meredith's manuscripts. Deis is submitting for publication a collection of Meredith's short fiction, including explanatory notes and introductions, that "will bring to light works by Meredith that have not received critical attention" and make Meredith's themes and subjects more easily understood.

J. Michael Berman (Mathematics) gave a lecture-demonstration entitled "A Reluctant Convert's First Experience with Computers in Calculus" at the Spring Meeting of the Maryland-District of Columbia-Virginia Section of the Mathematical Association of America in April 1991 at Virginia Commonwealth University. In May 1991, he attended a workshop at Duke University on responding to student writing and in July, he participated in a two-week National Science Foundation-funded workshop at The Ohio State University on technology strategies.

Patrick Wilson (Philosophy) spent eight weeks of last summer at an NEH seminar on the philosophy of science. The remainder of the summer was devoted to completing a long paper on "Shortcomings of the Teleological Anthropic Principle" under a Hampden-Sydney faculty fellowship. He was fortunate also to meet Wesley C. Salmon, renowned philosopher, and arranged for Professor Salmon to present a lecture "What Makes Scientific Understanding Special?" at the College in October. Wilson also read a paper, "Religious Explanations in Cosmology," at the Virginia Philosophical Association's annual meeting. He and Vince Iverson attended both that meeting and the Chapel Hill Colloquium in Philosophy in October.

Graves and Leila Thompson and Wayne Tucker (Classics) attended the semi-annual meeting of the Classical Association of Virginia in Charlottesville on Saturday, September 21.

Among the Latin teachers in attendance were five Hampden-Sydney graduates: In addition to Graves, the alumni were Hartley Schearer '68, who teaches Latin in Winchester; Lee Perkins '71, who is at St. Catherine's; Arthur Sperry '84, who teaches Latin in Frederick County; and Chris Ward '91, who began his career last fall in Appomattox County. An appreciation of Tucker's Latin instructor at Randolph-Macon College, Robert Epes Jones, appeared in the Fall 1991 issue of the college's Bulletin, an expansion of remarks Tucker made last spring at the dedication of the Robert Epes Jones Seminar Room at R-MC.

For almost two years, Jorge Silveira (Modern Languages) has been the editor of The Forum, the official publication of Phi Sigma Iota, the International Foreign Language Honor Society. The Forum goes out to over thirty thousand readers in this country and several others throughout the world. Silveira has published articles, poetry (original and translated) and art work that have been produced by the Hampden-Sydney faculty and community, supporting our efforts to spark an interest in study and research in foreign languages and cultures.

In September Amos Lee Laine (History) attended the Sixteenth International Conference on Patristic, Mediaeval and Renaissance Studies sponsored by the Augustinian Historical Institute at Villanova University.

Emphasized in plenary sessions and several of the papers was the cartographic background to the voyages of Columbus and Arabic astronomy during the Age of Discovery. Laine read a paper entitled "Converted by Rhetoric?: The 'Success' of John Frith's Attack on the More Circle." This topic grew out of some of his spring 1991 sabbatical reading.

In October, Laine and Diana Rhoads (English) attended a workshop at the Folger Shakespeare Library in Washington, where 330 registrants from the United States, Canada, Great Britain, and Switzerland gathered to hear fourteen international scholars discuss Tudor history and literature under the title, "Court and Culture During the Reign of Elizabeth I: the Last Decade."

Kenneth Townsend (Economics) and Roxanne Prazniak (History) were two of the four speakers at a symposium entitled "Tears of the Earth: Human Society, Environmental Degradation and Resource Management in Asia," held at the annual meeting of the Virginia Consortium for Asian Studies in October. Hampden-Sydney is a member of the Consortium.

Donald A. Kniffen (Physics) presented a lecture, "Gamma-Rays and the Gamma Ray Observatory: What are they Telling us About our Hyperactive Universe?" at the first of the year's series of conversations on faculty research in October. In November, Kniffen spoke at the Nuclear Science Symposium (NSS) of the Institute of Electrical and Electronic Engineers (IEEE) in Santa Fe, New Mexico. His address was entitled, "GRO: Our New Eyes to the Violent Universe" and comprised two major revelations: his surprise discovery of a quasar, 3C279, more than 4 billion lightyears distant, that emits at least 10 million times as much energy in gamma-rays as does our Milky Way Galaxy; and new information on the origin of gamma-ray burst sources, short intense "flashes" of gamma-rays, thought now to be the result of neutron-star burnout.

Jorge Silveira

Ronald Heinemann (History) was granted a two-course reduction in his teaching assignment for the fall semester to complete an additional three chapters of his biography of Harry F. Byrd, Sr., the most significant Virginia politician in the twentieth century. He began the work in 1988 (with the help of a fellowship from the Virginia Foundation for the Humanities) in the Byrd archives at the University of Virginia. The manuscript should be complete by summer 1992.

In October, Lowell Frye and Elizabeth Deis (Rhetoric and Humanities) delivered a lecture, "To Manner Born, to Manners Bred: Deconstruction of the Myth of the Victorian Gentleman," in which they compared the gentlemanly ideals embodied in Victorian fiction with the reality of Victorian and modern male standards. Their talk was part of the Hampden-Sydney honors lecture series.

Alan Farrell (Modern Languages)

read a paper on techniques of literary analysis in the foreign language classroom at the fall Conference on Transitional Techniques at Loyola University. In January, he returned to Viet Nam with the Council on International Educational Exchange for a two-week seminar in Hanoi and Saigon. In March he will speak to the Popular Culture Convention on Vietnamese Literature in French and to the Société des Professeurs Francophones de l'Amérique on the Vietnamese pidgin language, tai boy. In April he flies to the Wichita State University Conference on Women in Literature to

WHAT I DIDN'T LEARN IN KINDERGARTEN

Robert S. Mathews '52 writes of a Snapper Massey moment in the spring of 1949:

"A warm breeze blew through the windows of Morton Hall, wafting my consciousness away from freshman Bible to Holiday Lake, or at least to Farmville, while Emerson Johnson gave his customary, thoughtful responses to Dr. Massey's grilling. Snapper Massey's attention was generally reserved for the best and brightest, like Emerson or Bob Hawks (relishing their brilliance or hoping to find a chink in their armor), or for the habitually unprepared (nameless here to protect the guilty), who deserved to be humiliated. So, I was startled to hear my name appended to what had apparently been a question. In the split second it took to return to the real world, I struggled to recall any meaningful portion of what had preceded my name—without success. Finally, I blurted out, 'Uh, would you repeat the question?'

"A familiar and frightening look crossed Dr. Massey's face as, in a voice dripping with derision, he intoned, 'Would you repeat the question? Would you repeat the question? Where'd you learn that, Mathews—kindergarten?'

"Well, it was all downhill from there. I'll spare the reader (and myself) the full recollection of the consequences. Besides, I doubt that the phrase, 'Take the Chair!' would terrify anyone who had not had the privilege of being educated by Dr. Massey. Rest assured that for the rest of the semester I was either well prepared or highly attentive or both. If unprepared, I tried to appear eager to be called on—and I was spared further pain.

"The moral of the story? Perhaps that, while Robert Fulghum is correct in his assertion that great truths can be learned in kindergarten, life sometimes demands a more sophisticated approach. Snapper Massey gave a post-graduate course in All I Really Need to Know."

Dr. J. B. "Snapper" Massey

read a paper whose background material has been supplied by Nancy Rose. Finally, Farrell will read a paper, "The People of the Ant," in Strasbourg to the Congrès International d'Études Francophones.

Last summer, Thomas DeWolfe (Psychology) completed two chapters for Salem Press's upcoming Encyclopedia of Social Science: Psychology, "Definitions of Abnormality" and "Abnormality, Legal Models." He has signed a contract to produce a third chapter entitled "Developmental Theory: Piaget."

In November, Ralph Hattox (History) delivered a talk on his work-in-progress entitled "Fifteenth-Century Near Eastern Diplomacy and Other Oxymorons."

New Faculty Profiles

Carl Stern (Economics) Retires; Inaugurated Innovative Exchange Faculty Program

December 11 was Carl Stern's last day of teaching at Hampden-Sydney.

Wait, isn't Stern a professor at Randolph-Macon Woman's College? Yes. Since 1952, he has been a professor of economics at the Lynchburg college and is chair of the department. During his career at Randolph-Macon, he has won both of its faculty awards, the Gillie A. Larew Distinguished Teaching Award and the Katherine Graves Davidson Award for noteworthy recognition brought to the College. He retires from the Randolph-Macon faculty in May 1992.

For the last 21 years, though, he has also taught economics at Hampden-Sydney as part of the faculty exchange program he helped to create. During the fall semester every year, Stern has travelled to Hampden-Sydney once a week to teach corporation finance, while a member of our economics faculty teaches at R-MWC. His reason for his long-term dedication to the program is simple. "I believe in the exchange," he says. "It's good for our students to get more than a local point of view in economics. And it's done at relatively low cost to both institutions."

While Stern's dedication to teaching is impressive, his other professional activities are equally so. Since 1969, he has served on the National Defense Executive Reserve of the U.S. Department of Transportation. Putting his special interest in public utility economics to good use, he has served as a consultant to both American Telephone and Telegraph and Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company of Virginia, and is now co-chair of a committee representing stockholders in the Columbia Gas bankruptcy case. He is one of fifty educators on the Educational Advisory Board of Consumers

But according to his colleagues, at Randolph-Macon as well as at Hampden-Sydney, Stern's greatest interest has always been his students. Ernest Duff, Charles A. Dana Professor of Politics and Stern's colleague at Randolph-Macon, admires Stern's talent for remembering "just about every student he ever taught."

"At reunions, he can call by name students he taught twenty or thirty years ago. And he keeps in touch with many of them." According to William Hendley, associate professor of economics at Hampden-Sydney, "over the years Professor Stern has been instrumental in helping our students get positions after graduation. And even though he is here only one day a week in the fall semester, he has had a great influence on them—he is an exceptionally effective teacher. Many of them have stayed in touch with him."

Stern himself says that he continues to get one or two letters a week from former Hampden-Sydney and Randolph-Macon students. "One of my former Hampden-Sydney students has even called with job offers for my Randolph-Macon students," he adds.

Stern's "single-minded devotion" to his profession and his students brought him an unusual honor in 1984, when Randolph-Macon established the Carl Stern Chair of Economics and named him the first incumbent. The endowment for the chair, the first ever given in honor of a current faculty member, came from a group of alumnae who "adored him," as Duff describes it.

This for a man who never intended to teach in the South or at a single-sex institution—or at all. But when he was an indigent grad student at the University of Pennsylvania in 1946 and asked a professor to let him grade papers to make some extra cash, the professor responded, "Grade papers? Why don't you teach?" Since then, Stern says, "My goal has always been teaching, and I've loved it." He taught at the Wharton School for six years before going to Randolph-Macon.

He loves teaching so much, he hates to leave it. And others hate to see him go. President Lorimer has pleaded with him to stay; she even threatened, good-naturedly, to spread an amusing story about Stern (one she had picked up from one of his former students) if he left the college before she did.

But Stern stands on the principle that "there comes a time when every teacher must leave the classroom"—he went so far as to shred his notes "to make sure I went through with it." Besides, his wife, Charlotte, professor of Spanish at Randolph-Macon, will also retire in May. They have work to do: she will finish a book she has been writing; Stern will continue with his consulting work and perhaps "do some writing" as well. "Probably not in my field," he says quickly. "I want to write about some of my experiences as a teacher." He laughs and continues, "every ex-teacher plans on writing reminiscences, and I have a lot of them."

Editor's note: For those of you who might like to write to Dr. Stern, he can be reached at 1109 Graham Street, Lynchburg, VA 24504.

STAFF NOTES

George M. Tribble IV was named, in July, the assistant director of the annual fund at Hampden-Sydney.

A 1991 graduate of Hampden-Sydney, he was a member of the Student Senate and a resident advisor. He was also chairman of the off-campus housing committee, a member of the student admissions committee, and a public address announcer for Hampden-Sydney basketball. Tribble was selected for the Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges for 1991.

As Assistant Director of the Annual Fund, he coordinates and directs the alumni reunion giving program, the student development committee, and the senior class campaign.

Candice Dowdy, former director of corporation and foundation relations at Longwood College, was appointed, in August, Assistant to the Vice President and Director of College Events.

At Longwood, Mrs. Dowdy had also worked as an admissions counselor and special projects coordinator.

Voted the Outstanding Young Woman of Virginia in 1971, Mrs. Dowdy is a member of the Farmville Chamber of Commerce, secretary of the Hampden-Sydney Music Festival Board, and a volunteer fund-raising consultant for Prince Edward Academy. She is also a free-lance graphic artist.

She assumes responsibility for organization and coordination of events; special programs related to fund-raising, promotion, and donor recognition; and assistant vice president's duties.

Mrs. Dowdy lives in Farmville with her husband, Chuck, who is an agent for Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance. They have two children, Hollace, who attends Meredith College, and Christopher, who is in the ninth grade at Prince Edward

On August 19, to celebrate the successful implementation of the College's new telephone and voice mail system, Elbert Womack (above right, in front of the new switch panel), Centel's Customer Services Supervisor I&R for Farmville, presented Linda G. Clark (third from right), Hampden-Sydney's Telecommunications System Technician, with a special meritorious service award in appreciation of her efforts during the switchover that officially took place on July 1. Scott Colley, who was Acting President and Provost during the transition, said, "We are jumping from Mayberry to the 21st century with the flick of a switch. These telephone lines connect us with computers that bring much of human knowledge to us in electronic form." In addition to Ms. Clark, other College staff who received recognition were Terry Baldwin, Catherine Foreman, Stan Gemborys, Paul Giles, Gerry Pettus (third from left), L. D. Phaup, Queta Watson, and Bob Wells. Also pictured are Centel employees Bill Young (left), Pete Bernard (second from left) and Buck McKay (second from right).

Academy.

Eunice Carwile was named, in September, Writer-Editor in the Publications Department.

A native of Prince Edward County, Mrs. Carwile came to Hampden-Sydney in 1985 as Secretary to the Assistant to the President and was promoted to Secretary to the President in 1988.

Also a part-time Hampden-Sydney student, she plans to graduate in May 1992 with a B.A. in English and Spanish. She is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Sigma Tau Delta, and Phi Sigma Iota honor societies. She lives in Farmville with her husband, Jim, who works for the U.S. Postal Service, and her son Jonathan, a student at Prince Edward Academy.

As Writer-Editor, Mrs. Carwile researches and writes for the alumni magazine and other College publications.

Bonnie R. Gilliam was named, in November, Executive Secretary and Assistant to the President.

A native of Keysville, Mrs. Gilliam came to Hampden-Sydney from Southside Virginia Community College, where she was Executive Secretary to the Provost. In May 1991, she received a B.S. in Business Administration through the Adult Degree Program of Mary Baldwin College, graduating with distinction while working full-time at SVCC. She is now enrolled in Longwood College's Master's degree program in college and community counseling.

Mrs. Gilliam provides executive support to the President and acts as liaison to the senior staff, faculty, students, and members of the Board of Trustees. She and her husband, Elliotte, live in Keysville; they have two grown daughters.

Toughing it Out in An Up-and-Down Year

A REPORT ON THE FUND-RAISING PICTURE

THE DISASTROUS downside which appeared to loom for the 1990-91 Annual Fund in March was averted by accelerated staff and volunteer efforts during the spring, including 12 added telethons, added personal appeals and solicitation mailings, and a special year-end plea to constituents who had made pledges but not paid.

As a result, in total giving the Annual Fund for 1990-91 set records, surpassing the Annual Fund for 1989-90 which was itself a record year.

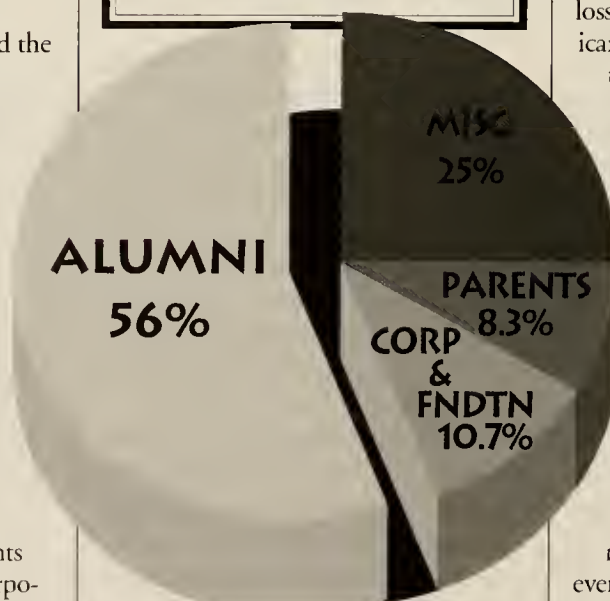

Specifically, the total contributions to the Annual Fund were $1,558,497, an increase of $43,275 (2.9%) over the 1989-90 total. While higher than the previous year's total, this amount was $42,279 short of the year's goal. Although the overall total surpassed the previous year's overall total, undesignated contributions totalled $3,762 less than the previous year, $91,784 short of the undesignated goal.

Giving by constituency was mixed. Trustee giving to the Annual Fund increased by almost ten percent. Although we had over 300 fewer donors than in the previous year, total alumni giving surpassed the previous year's total by four percent. "Friends" giving increased over the previous year by thirty-two percent. Giving from current parents declined by seventeen percent. Corporate support of the Annual Fund increased by eighty-four percent. Foundation grants increased by eighteen percent. Church support declined by twenty-six percent. And government grants declined by seventeen percent.

While the percentage of alumni participation appeared to have fallen

The College's overall Annual Fund total surpassed last year's, and we experienced a net gain in alumni giving even though the number of donors was fewer.

The Annual Fund broke all previous records for donations in a single year, furnishing more than 10% of the funds needed to run the College in 1990-91.

sharply, from 65% to 51.69%, this figure is misleading. Most of the gap happened when we located 805 alumni names (representing 12.68 percentage points) in the process of improving our data base. If these alumni had not been counted, our percent of participation would have shrunk by only one percent, while the trend across the country is a 3-4 percentage point drop in alumni participation.

In spite of special efforts to limit the number of unpaid pledges, the number of unpaid pledges was higher than the previous year (over 14% for alumni). This continues to be a disturbing and puzzling phenomenon, inconsistent with the nature of Hampden-Sydney.

We were particularly hard hit in the Founders Society, experiencing a net loss of 45 (8.5%). Particularly significant, and indicative of the year's negative economic climate, is the fact that 119 of the '89-'90 Founders did not contribute in '90-'91.

In summary, it has been a "good-news-bad-news" year. The bad news has been that the undesignated goal was not reached, that we had over 300 fewer donors than last year, and that we were particularly hard hit in the loss of Founders. The good news is that the College's overall Annual Fund total surpassed last year's, which was a record year, and that we experienced a net gain in alumni giving even though the number of donors was fewer. Especially relieving and encouraging is that the sharp downward spiral of the spring was reversed sharply to beat the previous year's totals.

FLEET FOUNDATION COMMITTS $1 MILLION FOR SCHOLARSHIPS

Julia B. Fleet of La Jolla, California, president of the Reginald S. and Julia W. Fleet Foundation, has committed a $1 million gift to Hampden-Sydney College, President Ralph A. Rossum announced. The money will be used to help students who demonstrate financial need.

The Reginald S. and Julia W. Fleet Foundation, named for the parents of Julia B. Fleet, is an independent foundation which gives money for the advancement of higher, secondary, and elementary education. The foundation is based in San Diego, California, yet historically it has provided generous support for Virginia institutions.

Miss Fleet said the decision to support Hampden-Sydney College through the Reginald S. and Julia W. Fleet Foundation was based in part on her father's "great affection for Virginia." A descendant of the Fleet and Seddon families of Virginia, she also values her rich heritage. Further, she appreciates small, single-sex, liberal arts colleges. Miss Fleet graduated from Bryn Mawr College, a liberal arts college for women in Pennsylvania.

Miss Fleet has also made generous personal gifts to Hampden-Sydney for the S. Douglas Fleet Scholarship. Her first cousin, S. Douglas Fleet, is a Hampden-Sydney trustee emeritus and former chairman of the board. The Fleet scholarship is awarded to students to provide the difference between an award made by the College and a student's full financial need.

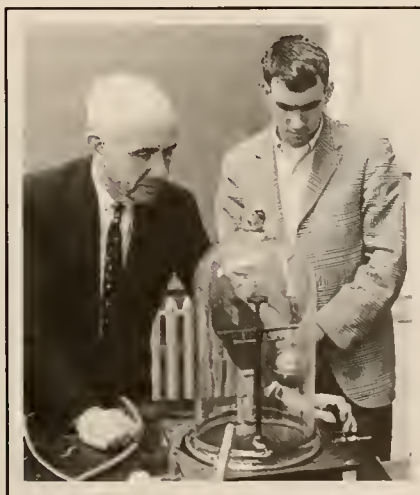

Her father, Reginald Fleet, was involved in the structuring of the WD-40 Company, manufacturers of the aerosol lubricant.

SCHOLARSHIP ENDOWED IN MEMORY OF DR. T. E. GILMER '23

Dr. Russell E. '38 and Mrs. Thelma T. Fox of Hampton, have endowed a scholarship in memory of Dr. Thomas Edward Gilmer '23. A summa cum laude Hampden-Sydney graduate, Dr. Gilmer taught physics at Hampden-Sydney College from 1927 to 1971, and was president of the College from 1960 to 1963. He also served Hampden-Sydney as Acting Dean of the College and as chairman of the Physics Department.

The Gilmer Scholarship will be awarded to students electing to major in the sciences, with preference given to those pursuing a degree in physics. In a very real sense the scholarship continues Dr. Gilmer's legacy of encouraging young men to study physics. Dr. Fox, who originally intended to study chemistry, was one of the young men Dr. Gilmer persuaded to study physics. "I took every class Dr. Gilmer offered. When we ran out of classes, he created new ones," explained Dr. Fox. "Other than my father, Dr. Gilmer had more influence than any other man on my life."

Dr. Fox was himself a scholarship recipient. But for a $50 scholarship, Dr. Fox would not have been able to attend Hampden-Sydney. "That $50 scholarship changed my life," he said.

"We were in the middle of the depression and my father could not afford to pay the full cost of a college education." His high school physics teacher, Mr. "Smoky" Baker, a Hampden-Sydney alumnus, encouraged Dr. Fox to apply for admission to the College and helped him get the scholarship. At Hampden-Sydney Dr. Fox met the man who would influence the rest of his life. With support from Dr. Gilmer, Dr. Fox continued his education in physics at the University of Virginia, where he received his M.A. in 1939 and his Ph.D. in 1942. Two weeks after receiving his Ph.D., he married Thelma Todd (now his wife of 49 years), and they left for Pittsburgh, where he spent his entire career working for Westinghouse Electric Corporation. In 1984, Dr. Fox retired, and he and Mrs. Fox returned to their native Hampton.

During those years, Dr. Fox never forgot Dr. Gilmer. At Dr. Gilmer's retirement dinner, Dr. Fox praised him as the embodiment of the Hampden-Sydney "total man." "Dr. Gilmer," he said, "combined science, religion, and human concern, especially for the student, in a unique way which demonstrated a deep appreciation for all aspects of life. Here was no ivory-towered scientist so engrossed with the facts of science that he neglected the facts of life. Here was no teacher so engrossed in his own pet science projects that he neglected his students."

Thanks to Dr. and Mrs. Fox, future young men otherwise unable to afford an education at Hampden-Sydney will be able to experience the joys of a close relationship between student and teacher that Dr. Fox and Dr. Gilmer shared.

Others who would like to honor Dr. Gilmer and continue his legacy of encouraging young men to pursue physics may send contributions to the College, designated for the Gilmer Scholarship.

KEATING MEDALLIONS AWARDED TO DEAN SCOTT COLLEY AND TRUSTEE RAY BOTTOM '51

At the Founders Dinner on November 8, 1991, the Keating Medallion, established by James J. Keating '66 to recognize those who "have kept Hampden-Sydney a real part of their lives," was given to Scott Colley and Raymond B. Bottom, Jr. '51.

An educator, author, and manager, he has published works on Shakespearean and Elizabethan literature, has edited a volume of Shakespeare's "Troilus and Cressida," and has written a history of the staging of Shakespeare's "Richard III."*

A member of the Board of Trustees since 1973, Mr. Bottom (lower right, with Founders Committee chairman and trustee Peter Leggett '68) is now a member of the Development, Buildings and Grounds, and Corporations and Foundations Committees. "He is one of the most devoted alumni Hampden-Sydney College has ever had," said Mr. Leggett. "He has given most generously to the College, in terms of both time and philanthropy." Mr. Bottom has been active in the Peninsula Area Alumni Association for many years. He served on the Corporations and Foundations Committee for the Campaign for Hampden-Sydney and as Chairman for the Peninsula Area capital campaign. In 1983, he received the College's Algernon Sydney Sullivan Medallion for "excellence of character and generous service to his fellows."

Hampden-Sydney has received for a second consecutive year a $55,000 grant from the State Council of Higher Education, under the provisions of the Federal Dwight D. Eisenhower Mathematics and Science Education Act, to continue its program to assist high school physics teachers with "hands-on" laboratory workshops all over Virginia, which have expanded and strengthened the physics instructional network and, through advanced workshops, created a group of master teachers of physics.

Directed by Dr. L. Neel Beard, Jr., professor of physics, the workshops began in 1990 as an expansion of his American Association of Physics Teachers Workshops and the Physics Equipment Loan Program. In 1989, Hampden-Sydney received the Merck Company Foundation Innovation Award in Undergraduate Science Education for Beard's efforts to make the study of physics more available to high school students by designing simple and inexpensive laboratory apparatus.

Each workshop participant receives a set of equipment made from unsophisticated hardware-store items and a manual and video on how to use the apparatus to demonstrate the basic principles of physics. Participants also develop contacts through the workshop which help them overcome the professional isolation many of them feel: eighty per cent of the teachers cited in an AIP survey said that they were the only teachers of physics in their schools. Fifty-one of the seventy-seven participants in fall workshops signed up for this year's advanced workshops.

"Hampden-Sydney's partnership with the State Council of Higher Education and with state high schools is helping to strengthen Virginia's position of leadership in improving science education and in transforming the teaching of physics," said Dr. J. Scott Colley, Dean of the Faculty.

SUMMER LIBERAL ARTS PROGRAM PROMOTES MINORITY EDUCATION

Eleven students from five Virginia community colleges, including seven from Southside Virginia Community College, took part in the highly successful inaugural session of the Hampden-Sydney Summer Liberal Arts Program for African-American male students last summer. The four-week residential program was designed to expose students to the nature and expectations of liberal education and to encourage them to learn the bachelor's degree in small private colleges like Hampden-Sydney.

Participants and their peer counselors Troy Drafron, Ed Harrison, Russell Turner, and Orson Williams (all current students) took two courses, environmental biology and Latin American culture. The students also worked two hours daily in Eggleston Library, assisting in the installation of the new collection security system. Sessions on study skills, time management, career goals, and admissions and financial aid complemented the class schedule.

An unusual feature of the session was a weekly "role model" dinner featuring visits by black alumni of the College. The students were able to discuss the benefits of small college life with Ed Owens '80, an independent insurance agent and entrepreneur; Willie Fobbs '87, an officer of the State Corporations Commission; Alvin Allen '90, a commercial lender with Central Fidelity Bank; and David Blackwell '87, a mathematics teacher in York County. A weekend field trip to Washington, D.C., allowed the men to hear from Judge Rodney Ruffin '82 and Warren Thompson '81, who entertained the group in his Herndon home.

One participant, Noel Robinson of Concord, Virginia, transferred from Central Virginia Community College in Lynchburg to enter Hampden-Sydney as a member of the class of '94. All of the participants indicated in post-program evaluations that they intended to attain four-year degrees; only half held that clear goal on the first day.

The Summer Liberal Arts Program is supported by grants from the Jessie Ball duPont Fund of Jacksonville, Florida, and The Teagle Foundation of New York City.

HARRISON TRAVELING SCHOLARS GET MEMORIES FOR LIFE

A woman from New York with an informed appreciation of art, who enjoyed frequent travel, married a Richmond businessman descended from the College's Founding Trustees and whose family has many associations with Hampden-Sydney. They lived in London for many years, until their home was destroyed during the blitz of World War II. Then Robert C. and Francena T. Harrison returned to Richmond and lived there until their deaths. Their lifetime philanthropic pursuits have been sustained by the Francena T. Harrison Foundation Trust, which generously supports institutions and causes in which the Harrisons were interested.

As a result, Hampden-Sydney students have the opportunity to study Britain's literature, history, and culture at first hand, to do research in its great libraries, to visit its museums and galleries, to meet its politicians, businessmen, and professionals. Most importantly, the Harrison Traveling Scholarship allows students to learn about British life and culture by living with British families and to travel throughout Europe at a time of historical political and economic changes there.

The Robert C. and Francena T. Harrison Traveling Scholarship was established in 1988 through a gift of the Francena T. Harrison Foundation Trust in memory of Robert C. and Francena T. Harrison. The principal of this endowed fund now exceeds $100,000.

Robert Campbell Harrison was a brother of late Hampden-Sydney trustee Frederick Nash Harrison and an uncle of former Hampden-Sydney trustee Frederick N. Harrison, Jr. He was president of Export Leaf Tobacco Company and a director of the British-American Tobacco Company in London (BAT), food and tobacco manufacturers and merchants, operating worldwide. A descendant of two Hampden-Sydney College Founding Trustees—Judge Paul Carrington, Sr., and Nathaniel Venable, he was connected to other early Hampden-Sydney families, namely the Bruces, Cabells, Mortons, Nashes, Reads, and Watkinses. His brother, Frederick Nash Harrison, was the donor of the Anna Carrington Harrison Leadership Scholarship honoring their mother's memory. Frederick Nash Harrison, Jr., has been most generous to Hampden-Sydney in a variety of ways, as has his sister. The family association continues through Richard Blair Craig, Jr. '89, grandson of Frederick Nash Harrison, Jr. and grandnephew of Robert C. Harrison.

The history of the Harrison Traveling Scholarship at Hampden-Sydney College, while still a short one, is rich with the diversity of student interests and accomplishments. Five Hampden-Sydney students have been given unusual opportunities to understand and appreciate British history and culture and have made the most in a variety of ways of the advantages given them.

JAY ABBOTT '90

Carlos A. Alvarenga III '90, a humanities major from Whitestone, New York, spent a semester studying classics at Bath, Oxford, and Stratford, and is now enrolled in a Ph.D.

program at Cornell University.

Jay Abbott '90 of Oldwick, New Jersey, a history major and Hobbie Scholar in Business Ethics, participated for a semester in the Hollins Abroad Program at the University of London. His studies concentrated on Britain's parliamentary system of government and Britain's role in the European Economic Community. His enthusiasm for foreign study and for his British experience was apparent in his letters to friends at home.

"The education, the friendships, and the memories from my 'overseas adventure' combined in a once-in-a-lifetime experience that I will remember for many years to come. My decision to study abroad was one of the wisest I made during my college career. The experience was an education that no professor, lecture hall, or text can match." He said that studying British architecture, history, literature, and economics and living with a British family gave him a new perspective that is the most beneficial aspect of his college education. He is now more sympathetic to foreign concerns and places greater value on the benefits and opportunities that many Americans take for granted.

Francena Harrison would be especially pleased to hear the comments of Abbott's classmate, John Lenzi, Jr. '91, a mathematics and computer science major, who spent a semester at Trinity College, Camarthen, Wales.

"I got to see the actual paintings we were learning about rather than having to rely on faded slides that are a fraction of the size of the original. I toured castles, Iron Age fortresses, and even mythological lakes—this was as important as studying the Celtic World and European art in the classroom."

Mr. Harrison, an international businessman, would be pleased to hear that Harrison Traveling Scholars learn about Britain's role in the European Economic Community and have an opportunity during their travels to experience the changing political and economic life of Europe today.

Lenzi wrote home: "One of the main highlights was the chance to see the opening up of two countries. One I witnessed as I stood at The Berlin Wall. Then just a month later I was in Lenin-grad during the May Day celebration." He also wrote that while his classroom experience was valuable, so was the opportunity to talk to British citizens, to read their newspapers, and to hear and watch their news programs. Taking advantage of vacations, he spent St. Patrick's Day in Dublin and Easter in Greece, giving further lively meaning to a Harrison Traveling Scholarship.

Joseph Glass '91 spent a semester of his senior year at the University of London. His study of British history spanned the eras of the Tudors, the Stuarts, and the Civil War, giving him the perfect excuse to research and write a short biography of the life of Alger-non Sydney, one of the two English patriots after whom Hampden-Sydney is named.

Bradley Teague, now a senior, spent a semester at Mansfield College, Oxford, where he completed two terms of a three-term year, studying economics. His time at Oxford introduced him to many new experiences, including rowing. Because he rowed in Mansfield's second eight, he was able to compete in the Oriole Regatta in which Mansfield won the novice division. He played basketball for Mansfield College and went to finals in the University Cuppers Tournament. He made friends not only of Britons, but of Americans from parts of his own country unknown to him. Further, he learned self-discipline, in his own words, "in a major way."

Not entirely new was the tutorial system. Teague adapted to it well, because it was similar to the one-to-one faculty-student relationships of Hampden-Sydney and he was prepared for the emphasis on critical thought by his liberal arts experience at Hampden-Sydney.

These young men are the first in a long line of Harrison Traveling Scholars who will add continuing lustre to the Harrison name by continuing the tradition of Anglo-American friendship that Francena and Robert Harrison exemplified so well.

All Harrison Traveling Scholars, reflecting in their studies and interests those of Francena and Robert Harrison, add further distinction to the chronicle of the relationship of the Harrison family to Hampden-Sydney College. We are proud of our Harrison Scholars and grateful to the trustees of the Harrison Foundation Trust for giving them the opportunity to be immersed, even for a short time, in British culture.

PROFESSORS ARE STUDENTS AGAIN IN AREA SEMINARS SUPPORTED IN PART BY HUSTON FOUNDATION

The Area Specialists Program was designed to foster campus interest in areas of the world previously under-represented in the curriculum of the College. Visiting professors—experts on the region under study and capable of wide interdisciplinary overview—are recruited from nearby colleges and universities to teach a three-hour, two-semester course for advanced undergraduates and a separate faculty development seminar one day per week. Individual, self-paced study of a major regional language is an integral part of the program.

The goals of the program, in addition to increasing faculty and student awareness of other cultures, include the formation of faculty interest groups that may lead to team-taught interdisciplinary offerings; informing the teaching and scholarship of the faculty as they engage in their routine pursuits; fostering collegiality in an academic setting where most participants are essentially equal in background; and "making teachers students again."

In 1989-90, the pilot seminar, led by Professor Ralph Hattox of the history department, focused on the Middle East. Eleven professors from a wide variety of departments (including chemistry, classics, economics, English, religion, and modern languages) took part in the program. Participants studied Arabic and/or Turkish in addition to the history, geography, culture, and politics of the region.

In 1990-91, thirteen professors studied Latin America or Southeast Asia in the weekly seminars, which were directed by Professor Ernest Duff of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, a specialist in Latin American politics, and Professor Patrick Mayerchak of Virginia Military Institute, also a political scientist. After a brief hiatus, the program will resume in 1992 with seminars on Eastern Europe, Africa, and North America (with special emphasis on intracontinental relations).

The program has been supported by grants from the U.S. Department of Education (Title VI) and the Consortium for the Advancement of Private Higher Education. Generous grants from the Huston Foundation have permitted the acquisition of new library materials, both print and audio-visual, for the support of the seminars and subsequent offerings.

Second-half Surge Keys Historical Season in Sports

By Dean Hybl

HAMPDEN-SYDNEY'S Tigers completed their 100th Year of Collegiate Football with a perfect second half capped by a 29-28 victory over Randolph-Macon, the fifth in a row. The Tiger offense was a big reason for the second-half surge as H-SC scored 50 or more points in a school-record three straight games and averaged 43 points per game over the final five weeks.

H-SC's final record of 7-2-1 was the team's best mark since 1986 and was remarkable considering that Coach Joe Bush and his staff entered the season with many holes left by the graduation of 15 key members of the 1990 squad. The 1991 team included four new starters on the offensive line and six freshmen starters on the defensive unit.

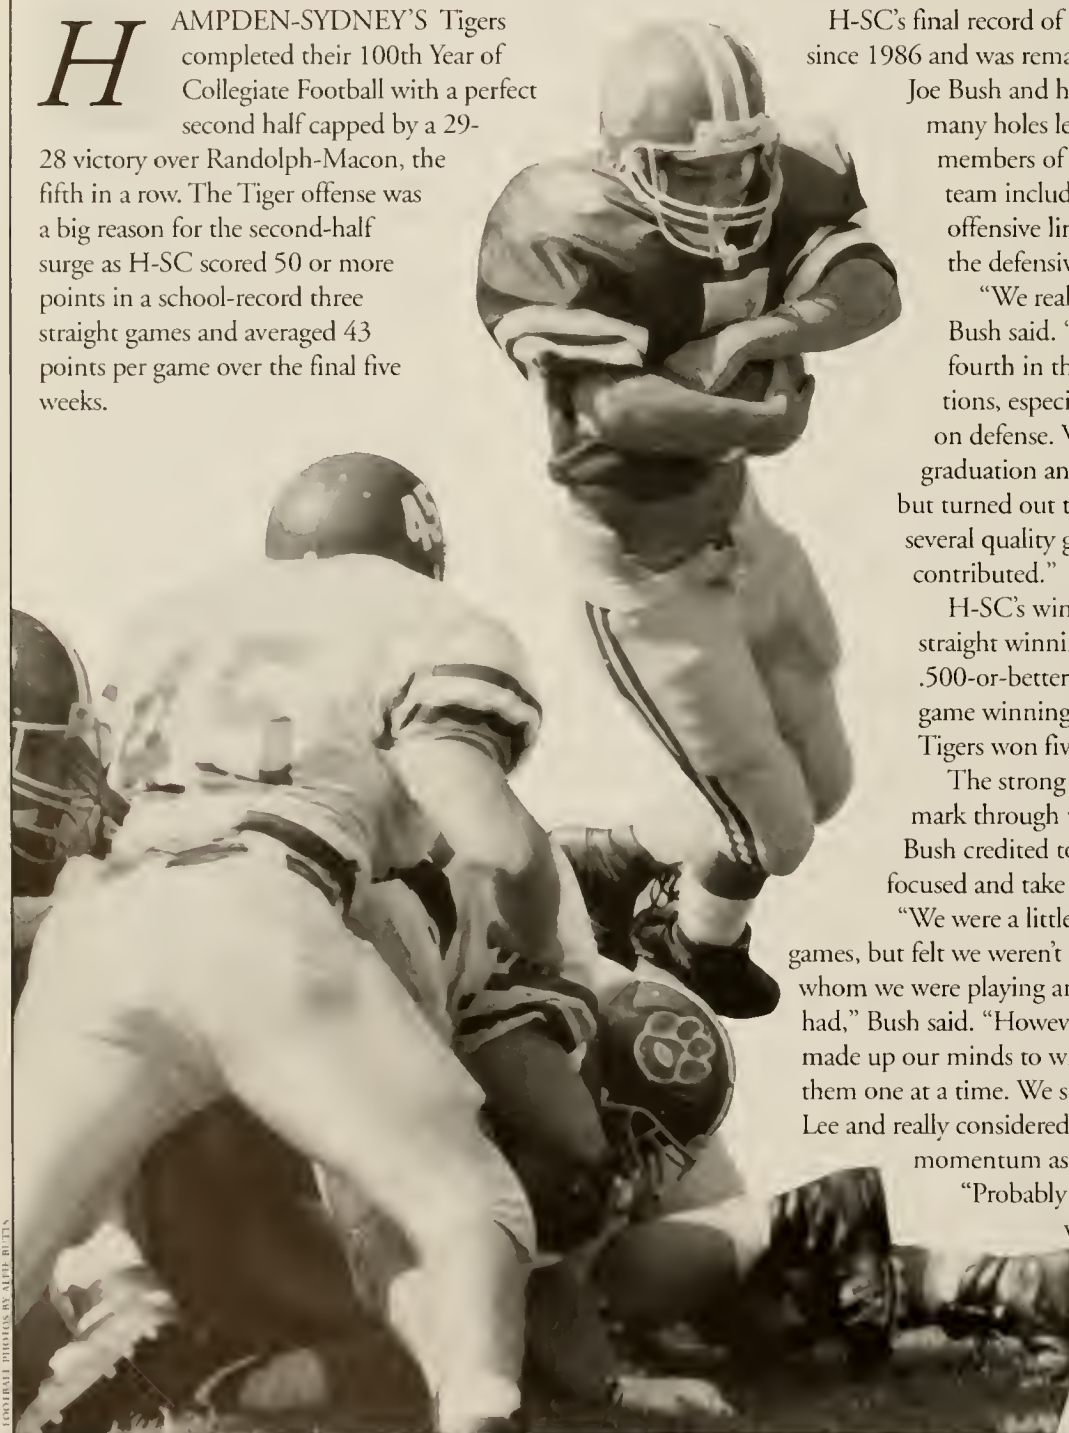

"We really didn't know what to expect," Bush said. "We were picked to finish fourth in the ODAC and had a lot of questions, especially on the offensive line and on defense. We lost some talented players to graduation and not coming back to school, but turned out to be very fortunate as we had several quality guys who stepped right in and contributed."

H-SC's winning season was the fourth straight winning campaign and sixth straight .500-or-better year under Bush. Their five-game winning streak was the first since the Tigers won five consecutive games in 1986.

The strong finish, after posting a 2-2-1 mark through the first five games of the year, Bush credited to the team's ability to stay focused and take the games one at a time.

"We were a little disappointed after the first five games, but felt we weren't in too bad a shape considering whom we were playing and how many young players we had," Bush said. "However, after the loss at Emory, we made up our minds to win the last five games and took them one at a time. We started out with Washington & Lee and really considered ourselves a big train gaining momentum as we went along.

"Probably the big turning point was the win over Wesley (50-49). The way we won it gave us a lot of confidence and started us on our big scoring kick. Coming back against them really gave us a tremendous boost of confidence."

The Tigers' season-ending victory over Randolph-Macon, the final stop on H-SC's train ride to a successful season, was a special one for Coach Bush and his team.

"Beating Macon was a perfect way to end our 100th year of football. It was really the icing on the cake. It allowed us to finish with a real good record and gave us something to build on next year."

Though Hampden-Sydney had only six senior players during the 1991 campaign, the group included five starters who provided the Tigers with much-needed leadership during the season. "There is no question we will miss these guys next season," Bush said. "The quantity of seniors may be small, but the quality is definitely high. They all played key positions and they all played them very well."

Four of the Tigers' five senior starters, Jay Hicks, Warren Liptok, John Lavalle, and Dwayne Bowyer, were recognized as All-ODAC selections, while the fifth senior, Paul Amos, was a two-year starter and key performer at fullback.

Bowyer will leave a significant void: in his two and a half seasons as H-SC's starting quarterback, Bowyer performed as well as anyone who had ever played the position for the Tigers. The senior from Mechanicsville finished his remarkable H-SC career by passing for a school-record 1,812 yards. He finished as the ODAC's leading passer for the third straight year and completed his career with a school-record 34 touchdowns and 4,380 yards passing. Bowyer also finished the season as the 11th-highest-rated quarterback in Division III football. In his 25 starts for H-SC, the Tigers posted a 17-7-1 record.

"We will certainly miss Dwayne's leadership and talent on the field," Bush said, "but we will also miss the leadership and direction he gave the younger players off the field. He was a very durable player who took a lot of punishment. You just have to look at our record over the last three years to see that he was a real winner."

Bowyer was not the only Hampden-Sydney player to move up in the school's football record books. Senior flanker Jay Hicks finished his career with 1,542 yards receiving to rank fourth on H-SC's career list. Hicks finished as H-SC's career leader in average yards per catch with 21.4. Junior Chad Duncan led the ODAC in scoring and tied for fourth on H-SC's all-time single-season scoring chart with 74 points.

On the team front, the Tigers' 348 points easily broke the ten-game team record of 316 set in 1977. Three straight 50-point games also established a school record, as did the 1,912 passing yards. The H-SC offense finished 12th nationally in Division III in scoring average and 26th in total offense.

Post-season recognition was also prevalent as eleven Tigers were selected to the All-ODAC squad and several were also recognized as All-State performers by the Roanoke Times. Those earning first-team All-ODAC selection were tight end John Lavallo, running back Cetric Gayles, flanker Jay Hicks, and nose guard Greg Hatfield. Second-team selections were offensive guards Andy Cook and Steward Carlisle, center Brian Rollison, quarterback Dwayne Bowyer, defensive tackle Eric Dye, and defensive backs Warren Liptok and Curtis Turner. Hatfield, Lavallo, and Gayles were named first-team All-State for Division II and III while Bowyer, Hicks, and Cook received second-team recognition.

With seven of these all-conference performers and many other key players returning, the beginning of Hampden-Sydney's second 100 years of football promises to be very exciting and successful.

Quarterback Bowyer named VaSID Player of the Year

In recognition of his outstanding senior season, in which he led the Tigers to an impressive 7-2-1 record, the Virginia Sports Information Directors (VaSID) has named Hampden-Sydney quarterback Dwayne Bowyer the Virginia College Division Player of the Year among all Division II, III, and NAIA schools.

The Mechanicsville resident served as the team's captain for 1991 and finished the season as the eleventh leading passer in Division III nationally. He completed 56.9% of his passes for a school-record 1,812 yards and 14 touchdowns. Bowyer finished his college career as Hampden-Sydney's career leader in touchdown passes, with 34, and ranks second in career passing yardage, with 4,375.

Bowyer was named the top player in the state despite having been narrowly edged out of first-team quarterback honors by Virginia Union's Carl Wright.

VaSID also honored three other Hampden-Sydney players as first-team All-State picks: tight end John Lavallo, running back Cetric Gayles, and flanker Jay Hicks.

Quarterback Dwayne Bowyer (at right) was named VaSID Player of the Year, while junior placekicker David Brickhill (far right) was named to the Academic All-America team—the sixth Hampden-Sydney player so honored.

Placekicker Brickhill earns Academic All-American honors

Hampden-Sydney junior placekicker David Brickhill has been named a first-team Division III GTE Academic All-American by the College Sports Information Directors of America. He is the third Hampden-Sydney football player in the last three years to be recognized as an Academic All-American.

A mathematics major at H-SC, Brickhill has a 3.876 cumulative GPA and has received many special awards in his area of study. He was the 1991 recipient of the Macon Reed Award for excellence in Mathematics and Computer Science and also received an award for the highest GPA in his class after two years of college.

On the football field Brickhill has been a key player for the Tigers. In 1990 he was a first-team All-ODAC and All-State performer, leading all Division II and III kickers in Virginia in scoring. This past season he was H-SC's fourth leading scorer with 39 points, missing only two of 38 extra-point attempts.

Brickhill is the sixth Hampden-Sydney player since 1982 to earn GTE Academic All-America recognition, joining John Dickinson (1982), Hiter Harris (1982), Brad Cary (1984), T. C. Wilson (1989), and W. R. Jones (1989 & 1990).

Senior football players and their fathers attended a dinner in their honor before the annual Randolph-Macon game. This year's team had six seniors, five of whom spent at least two years as starters for the Tigers. Each senior received a silver cup commemorating his years on the team. The cups are donated annually by H. Hiter Harris Jr., a Trustee of the College (front row, second from left), and his son Hiter Harris III, a former Tiger football player (front row, at left). The event was a prelude to a very productive weekend: the Tiger seniors finished their careers by defeating Randolph-Macon 29-28. Their four-year record was 25-14-1, with winning campaigns in each season.

WATER POLO

Under the direction of head coach Ray Rostan, the Hampden-Sydney water polo team rose to new heights during the 1991 season, finishing second at the Virginia Water Polo Championships and sixth in the Eastern Regional of the NCAA Tournament.

In their fifth year as a varsity sport at Hampden-Sydney, the water polo squad has shown improvement in each campaign and this year made a major move towards becoming a competitive program at the Division III level.

The Tigers' impressive finish in the state tournament was the result of strong performances in four games: H-SC defeated James Madison 20-15, Lynchburg 14-13, and Virginia Tech 13-9 to earn a spot against Washington & Lee in the tournament finale. Against the nationally ranked Generals H-SC trailed by only one goal at the half before falling 14-7. Thatcher Worthen led H-SC with 20 goals during the event and Jon Wesson added 16.

In the NCAA regional tournament the Tigers were just seconds away from earning a first-round victory over Amherst College when disaster struck. Leading by a goal, the Tigers were in the process of running out the clock when an Amherst player stole an errant pass and scored the tying goal as time expired. The Tigers lost in overtime, eventually finishing sixth in the eight-team event. The Tigers did, however, earn a big 18-13 victory over Colby College as Worthen scored seven goals and Wesson added three.

The combination of juniors Worthen and Wesson was the big key for the Tigers throughout the season: Worthen finished with a team-leading 45 goals while Wesson was close behind with 41. The two finished first and second in the Southern Water Polo Conference in scoring. Worthen was honored as a first-team All-Conference selection and Wesson was a second-team pick. Both players were selected to the Virginia All-State Tournament squad. With goalie Jay Johnston, they should make a strong showing in next year's NCAA Regional.

Junior Thatcher Worthen (right) was the leading scorer in the Southern Water Polo Conference in 1991 and was a first-team All-Conference and All-State selection. Senior Duane Jones (far right) was HS-C's top cross-country runner in 1991.

SOCCKER

Under second-year head coach Michael Reilly, the Hampden-Sydney soccer team continued in 1991 to build the program for a future run toward success. The squad's 7-11-1 record was identical to the record achieved a year ago but showed some improvement as the Tigers had an excellent defense that set a school record with seven shutouts.

The season started with a bang as sophomore Rob Mitchell scored four goals in the first half of the Tigers' season-opening 6-0 victory over Ferrum College. H-SC continued a strong first half of the season with an overtime victory over St. Mary's and victories over Mt. Olive and Lynchburg to sprint to a 4-2 record.

However, the Tigers were unable to maintain their early momentum as they lost eight of their next nine games and were shut out six times. The highlight of this difficult stretch was an exciting 1-0 victory over Eastern Mennonite in which sophomore Jonathan Thayer scored the winning goal. On the down side, however, Thayer was injured in the game and was never able to regain the skill level that had made him a first-team All-ODAC selection as a freshman. Because of injuries, the Tigers were also forced to play the second half of the season without freshman defenseman Justin Isaacs.

The brightest spot for the Tigers during the 1991 season was an unrelenting defense that at times kept Hampden-Sydney's opponents from taking quality shots. For the season H-SC out-shot 13 of their 19 opponents and recorded a school-record seven shutouts. Leading the defensive unit were juniors David Sommardahl and Tom Ekman. As the Tigers' defensive sweeper, Sommardahl was an exceptional all-around player; but he also finished the season as the second leading scorer on the squad with 13 points.

For the third consecutive year, junior Richard Ruth led the team in scoring as he finished with seven goals and 17 points. After the injury to Thayer, teams double- and at times triple-teamed Ruth, but he still enjoyed a solid campaign.

Several freshmen made immediate impacts for Coach Reilly's squad in 1991. Jason Buckner started every game and contributed four points. Curtis Player and Justin Isaacs were also starters and all three will be looked to for big things next season.

CROSS-COUNTRY

After finishing third in the ODAC in 1990 with a team of ten runners, of whom only two were seniors, the Hampden-Sydney cross-country team held high expectations for 1991. Four runners, seniors Duane Jones and Christopher Jackson, and sophomores Matt Miles and Pat Thomas, returned to the team as school opened and seniors Alston Middleton and Rob Kinear joined the team a week later.

Despite tough times, the team did shine in a couple of areas. They managed to sweep Randolph-Macon and ran their best race when it counted most: at the ODAC championships held at Hampden-Sydney.

To cap the season, three of the runners—Duane Jones, Christopher Jackson, and Matt Miles—were named to the Dean's List.

Athletic Hall of Fame 1991

AT THE FOURTH annual Athletic Hall of Fame induction ceremony on November 9, 1991, master of ceremonies Joseph F. Viar, Jr. '63, Chairman of the Athletic Committee of the Board of Trustees, presented awards to 1991 inductees John Hunt '31, Bill Formwalt '36, Ron Henry '56, and David Anthony '77, and special citations to former coaches George Proctor and Louis F. Miller.

A four-year member of the baseball and football teams at H-SC, John Hunt '31 is still considered one of the finest hurlers in Tiger baseball history. During the 1928 season he pitched three one-hitters (against the University of Delaware, Randolph-Macon, and Bridgewater). As a senior, Hunt served as team captain. After graduation he pitched in the Bi-State-League and also pitched one game at the Triple-A level. In football Hunt was a four-year letterman as a tackle and center for Coach Yank Bernier. After graduating from Hampden-Sydney, the South Boston native spent more than 30 years as a school teacher and coach, including 24 years at Fork Union Military Academy.

H-SC's third football All-American, as recognized by Liberty magazine after the 1935 season, Bill Formwalt '36 was also captain of the '35 squad which, despite finishing 5-5, was the only Hampden-Sydney squad ever to defeat the University of Virginia—the Tigers recorded a 13-7 victory over the Cavaliers. Legendary H-SC Coach

Yank Bernier called Formwalt "one of the greatest ever to play end for Hampden-Sydney." In basketball Formwalt was also an outstanding performer and scored a career-high 34 points against American University. As a senior he was the leading scorer in the state of Virginia. Bernier said that both opposing players and newspaper reporters considered Bill Formwalt an outstanding player and sportsman.

Possibly the best end in Tiger history, Ron Henry '56 earned second-team Little All-America honors in 1955. As a senior he was captain of the squad that recorded an 8-1 mark, the best season record to that point in H-SC football history. Ron was named to the prestigious Little Seven team four seasons. In four years he played in every H-SC game, starting in all but one.

A three-time All-American golfer at H-SC, David Anthony '77 was a key member of H-SC's 1975 NCAA Division III runner-up team. Only a sophomore at the time, he was a vital part of that squad, finishing in the top ten at the national championships. Already recognized as a second-team All-American in 1975, Anthony went on to earn first-team recognition in both 1976 and 1977. Golf coach Gus Franke called Anthony "the most consistent golfer I ever coached."

Starting his athletic career as a coach and director of the old Richmond Boys Club, George "Gummy" Proctor influenced countless young men, helping many of them develop into high school and college athletes. He was recognized as the best basketball official in the South and officiated in the Southern Conference before it split to form the ACC. He was always the number-one official in the tournament.

On the court he had a way that kept the games under control without detracting from individual performances. Proctor eventually left the officiating ranks to become head basketball coach at Virginia Tech from 1931 to 1932 and again from 1944 to 1947. Coming to Hampden-Sydney in the fall of 1947, he was responsible for reviving basketball tradition at the school. His 1948-49 squad finished with a 22-3 record that still ranks as the best mark in H-SC basketball history. His 49-23 (.680) record as coach is the best winning percentage of any H-SC basketball coach. In 1974, in recognition of outstanding contributions to athletics in the state of Virginia as official, coach, and administrator, Proctor was inducted into the Virginia Sports Hall of Fame.

Coach Louis F. "Weenie" Miller has enjoyed a long and illustrious career in collegiate athletics, first as an athlete at the University of Richmond and later as a coach and administrator at several Virginia colleges. At the University of Richmond, Miller captained the baseball and basketball teams and also competed in football. After graduation he played for two years with the New York Yankee organization. Miller began his coaching career at the University of Richmond; he also coached at Hampden-Sydney, Washington & Lee, and VMI before spending 20 years in private business. Since he was named Athletic Director and baseball coach in 1986, he has had a major impact on the College's athletic programs. His influence has helped the Tigers field contenders in every sport and maintain a winning percentage above 56 percent in each of the last three years. In 1989 his final game as head baseball coach brought Hampden-Sydney its first Old Dominion Athletic Conference baseball championship. Coach Miller was instrumental in establishing the Hampden-Sydney Athletic Hall of Fame in 1988.

GREETINGS FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

For years, we Hampden-Sydney alumni have been applauded for our loyalty, devotion, and love for the College. Our camaraderie and fraternal kinship are mentioned in the same breath with those of VMI, surely a telling compliment. This loyalty takes tangible expression in our being consistently at or near the top of all colleges and universities in the United States in the percentage of alumni contributing to the Annual Fund. Disbelief usually greets the announcement that, with so much accomplished, there are only 6700 of us.

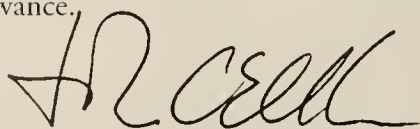

Yet for all these great accolades, there need to be more. Much talent, much enthusiasm remains untouched. We need to seek it out. The power of that enthusiasm, tapped effectively, would be truly phenomenal. There are small pockets of people doing great things for Hampden-Sydney right now. Try to imagine what we could do if more of us took the opportunity to participate in our selected area of interest!

The Alumni Association wants to instigate a greater feeling of purpose for us all. The nineties will be different from any other decade in history. Hampden-Sydney needs to prepare for the twenty-first century with every resource available to her. Is there a better resource than her 6700 sons, most of whom are relentlessly faithful? I think not.

The Alumni Association wants to help stimulate activity, enthusiasm, and networking for more of us. We want to stir the pot to discover potential, as well as simply to be the conduit through which this activity reverts to its true goal: augmenting the mission of Hampden-Sydney College. Most of us have accepted the praise heaped upon us. That is understandable and certainly acceptable. But can't we do just a little more? Shouldn't we put our energy and our involvement where our mouth is? I surely think so—and with ease.

You will hear from me soon about this. Several specific plans are in the works, including networking of alumni, job placement, and specialty reunions, just to mention a few. We need each alumnus to get involved where he is interested. If preliminary endeavors are any indication of ultimate success, there will be a great opportunity, and an even greater response.

To each of us Hampden-Sydney is a little different, yet it is very much the same to us all. It is worth your support. And for that I thank you, in advance.

JACK A. GLASCOCK, retiring in June 1991 after 41 years of teaching chemistry at Woodberry Forest School, was given the school's Distinguished Service Award for the "inescapable impact he has had on the lives of students during the past four decades." WFS's Board of Trustees Chairman John P. Castleman, Jr., described Glascock as "a demanding teacher whose high expectations awakened in [his students] the excitement of discovery. By instilling in students the skills to question assumptions and draw conclusions based on what they observed, Jack Glascock gave them tools for life that extended far beyond the chemistry lab."

Mr. Glascock, who attended Woodberry Forest School as a post-graduate, became a sports legend there in 1942 when he scored a record five touchdowns against archrival Episcopal High School. After graduating from Hampden-Sydney (summa cum laude and second in his class), he returned to Woodberry, where he not only taught chemistry but coached junior varsity and varsity football, baseball, and basketball.

He said he would miss his students the most--not "the kids with the high IQs," but those "who will struggle and work with it." Although he and his wife Betty moved off the WFS campus in June, they settled near the school's golf course. Mr. Glascock, who has won six school golf championships, is spending his retirement working in his yard, seeing more of his grandchildren, and "trying to improve my golf game."

During March 1991, Dr. JAMES W. LUKE, JR., made his west coast conducting debut as guest conductor with the San Diego Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Luke is Professor of Music in the School of Fine Arts, Drake University in Des Moines, Iowa, and each summer joins the faculty of the Interlochen Center for the Arts in Michigan at their National Arts Camp.

Dr. CLAUDIUS PRITCHARD, president of Maryville University in St. Louis, will retire in June of 1992. Dr. Pritchard became president of Maryville College in 1977. During his tenure Maryville grew from 1200 students to over 3500 and achieved university status (June 1991). Its endowment, $400,000 in 1976, has increased to $16 million. Dr. Pritchard, who holds a Ph.D. from Florida State University, went to Maryville from Sullins College (Bristol, Virginia), where he had served as President. Before that, he was successively assistant to the president, business manager and treasurer, and vice president for development at Hampden-Sydney.

Alumni Profile

William Hoffman '49, Writer

Justin Hayden Woelper '92 and Todd Moose '92

Even over the telephone Hoffman's humility and frank open-heartedness are inviting. One quickly senses, though, that beneath the easy-going banter an elemental, inner flame sings his mellow edges. When asked what three words best describe him, he unhesitatingly answers, "retiring, hot-tempered, and sensitive."

Hoffman's study in his well-lived-in antebellum home, Wynard, is a wood-paneled sanctum where he can free himself from social obligation and conformity. He has said he becomes a Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde when he closes the door.

"Most people are two people, and some are many more. When I walk into that room, I become a persona that only I know." This change he attributes not to a power within himself, but rather to influences beyond human limitations: "I believe in the Muses, that they talk to me and that I have to listen to them. It comes when I sit down at a typewriter. I don't worry about it or try to explain it. I just listen."

Claiming supernatural inspiration for writing is rare in an age in which publicity and money are prime motivators. Hoffman's work has not earned great commercial success because he has deliberately stayed outside the limelight. "I have not belonged to any group of writers, where there is a lot of you-help-me and I-help-you, and I have stayed away from New York, where things are trendy."

Hoffman has lived the retiring lifestyle of the Virginia gentry since he moved to Charlotte Court House in 1964. A native of West Virginia, he served three years in the Army in World War II. And his major regret goes back to his days in the War: "I wish somehow I had not been colorblind so that I could have flown a fighter plane—not a transport plane—a fighter plane."

On his return to the States, Hoffman graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Hampden-Sydney in 1949. He taught at the College from 1952 to 1959, returning in 1964 for a seven-year stay as writer-in-residence.

Today, he spends his time on his fifty-acre estate, writing.

But Hoffman has no regrets for the fame he may have missed by choosing a life in rural Virginia, and he looks to the importance and quality of the writing itself, not to the quality of life that it can give: "I have felt that if I write the best I can, sometime, somewhere, it will be appreciated."

His writing has not gone unnoticed. Days in the Yellow Leaf was named one of the best books of 1958 by the New York Times. Hoffman says that his second novel, The Trumpet Unblown, was "an astonishing success." In a 1985 review, Randy Hallman praised Godfires, in which "every character of any significance has his own inner flame."

Hoffman is able to ignite this flame in his characters because he writes about the people and issues that are important to him. But many of the topics he thinks important are not the sensationalized ones that make money.

For instance, Hoffman sees a distinct difference between the values that American society and the literary establishment place on religion, a theme that runs through his writing. "Religion is extremely important to most Americans . . . yet as a fictional subject it is practically ignored. It is a fascinating area for a writer. It is important [but] the secular society we live in treats it as contemptuous and trivial. And I take opposition to that view." Without hesitation, he chooses Jesus Christ as the one person in history with whom he'd wish to talk. He simply says, "It would resolve a lot of questions."

Hoffman has several projects in the works: one novel in New York, another just finished, a third that he is rewriting because he is "not satisfied with it," and a short story collection.

Hoffman will visit the Hill during Writers Week in April, co-sponsored by the Department of English and the 1992 Garnet. Hoffman has had a long association with the Garnet; in fact, he was first published in the May 1948 edition. And in 1952 he spurred its revival, under the original name, as a semi-annual publication. He has not read his work here since 1988.

Hassell Simpson, professor of English, says, "As a superb student and a fine teacher, Mr. Hoffman has already made significant contributions to the literary life of the College; this will be one more in a long string of benefits to us from our association with him."

Alumni Profile

J. Kendrick Woodley III '79, Editor

Like his father, Jim '59, and his brother, Bill '89, Ken Woodley '79, editor of The Farmville Herald, is a city man who is able to appreciate the significance of life in Southside Virginia. He came to Hampden-Sydney from Richmond (where he had written a few articles for the Douglas Freeman High School newspaper). He began to practice his craft at Hampden-Sydney, as business manager and columnist for the Tiger, editor of the student government newsletter, and a contributor to the Garnet. After graduation, though, he decided not to go back to the city and a bigger newspaper but to stay in Farmville, perhaps in part because he had been born there while his father was at Hampden-Sydney.

Woodley has moved up through the ranks quickly since he joined the staff of The Farmville Herald in June 1979 as a general assignment news reporter covering Buckingham County. He began to cover Prince Edward County and Farmville, becoming news editor in 1985. Last January he became editor. Ironically, he never wrote a news story until he took the job with the Herald; nonetheless he has distinguished himself with his news, feature, and editorial writing. Six months after joining the staff, he won a first-place award for feature writing from the Virginia Press Association. He has since won fourteen VPA awards for writing, including first place awards for stories about Dr. Alan Farrell's return to Vietnam—which judges said was unlike anything they had ever read before—and Dr. Paul Jagasich's swim across the English Channel.

Locally, Woodley is perhaps best known for his blunt, hard-hitting editorials, lately decrying the state's ignorance of rural communities' wants and needs. Woodley and The Herald have taken a firm stance against reapportioning state senate districts, claiming that the governor's new districts give rural Virginia in general—and the Farmville area in particular—less of a voice in government. Woodley takes his editorial duties seriously. He says there is an "awesome sense of responsibility," so he tries to think clearly and see both sides of every issue, realizing that a person will "thoughtfully consider an editorial if the editorial is thoughtfully considered, even if somebody disagrees with my opinion. You need a carrot with the stick because you accomplish nothing if you cannot entice those on the other side of an issue to consider your argument. Sometimes you do 'damn the torpedoes,' but you cannot do so constantly or the explosions will lose their effect. Whenever it is deserved you must treat opposing opinions with dignity. A great deal of thought goes into it." Living in a small town, however, means remembering that his readers are also his neighbors. "You have to have a conscience. Everybody is somebody's mother, father, son, or daughter—everybody is a human being. You have to realize that what you write can significantly affect the way they are viewed in the community."

Woodley believes that he is a better journalist because Hampden-Sydney's tough liberal arts curriculum instilled in him a curiosity about the world of ideas and their consequences. The single most effective course, he says, was Latry Martin's semester of Hemingway, because the professor required a paper on each novel—not a book report, but an original and thoughtful treatise on some theme or quirk. "He didn't tell us how to think or make us react to the novels the way he, or all the critics, had. It was intimidating at first but then extremely liberating. The class wasn't regurgitative assimilation of preconceived notions. He sent us out into the woods without a compass. It was an intellectual survival course. That's teaching. That's learning. And that, for me, is what's best about Hampden-Sydney and why I feel the College has gone on teaching me long after graduation."

Woodley also has a creative side, expressed in his column "Rafterthoughts," a series of amusing philosophical meditations. He has also published a book of poetry, The Ghost Behind Your Eyes, begun as an independent study course at Hampden-Sydney.

Woodley and The Herald play a vital role in the community, speaking out for the unique needs of rural Virginia, which has "a lot of odds stacked against it." While he could probably go on to better jobs at bigger papers, Woodley and his wife and two children seem to be happy in Farmville. "It's really nice to feel you can be trusted with things. A lot of people trust me, and I hope I won't let them down. Life is as important for people who live in the country as for those in the city. We are the only paper that cares about this community and the only paper that writes about them and for them."

H. HITER HARRIS III and Christopher H. Williams have founded Harris Williams & Co., a firm specializing in providing financial advice and services for small businesses. When the two men worked for Bowles Hollowell Conner & Co., in Charlotte, North Carolina, Mr. Harris says, they noticed that the large firm was not set up to handle small accounts efficiently and decided to go after that niche market. With headquarters in Richmond, Harris Williams & Co. offers valuations, development of business plans, private placements of debt and equity, acquisition searches, and management of private sales.

Dr. CHARLES F. MARTIN, Chief of Emergency Medicine at Fort Stewart, Georgia, was listed in Who's Who Among Physicians of America. Dr. Martin graduated from Eastern Virginia Medical School in 1987 and completed his emergency medicine residency at Madigan Army Medical Center, Tacoma, Washington, in 1990. He took part in Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm with the 24th Infantry Division (Mech) from August 1990 to March 1991 in Saudi Arabia and Iraq.

Alumni Profile

Jeff Berry '82, Soldier

War, soldiers say, is weeks of boredom punctuated by moments of terror and exhilaration.

Wayne Jefferson Berry '82, father of five children, captain in the Army, medical doctor, and paratrooper, should know. Deployed to Saudi Arabia in September 1990, he stayed in the Gulf until April 1991.

War, boring? Well, yes, in a way. "While the war made good TV," says Berry, "the images don't tell of the most challenging aspect of war, the challenge of remaining sharp despite incredible boredom and the agony of waiting." In the Gulf, the troops did abide by that old Army procedure: hurry up and wait. But, as the days crawled by, bringing only pesky flies and predictions of massive American casualties, the ennui became oppressive anxiety. Like the others, Berry became engaged in a struggle against the demons of self-doubt who can convince us, if we let them, that we will run or hide when the time comes to fight. "It was difficult to maintain a state of perpetual readiness—easy to let down your guard, question yourself and your abilities," he admits.

It was almost a relief when combat finally began. Berry welcomed the end, good or bad, of doubt: "In ways more civilized men than I may not understand, the start of the conflict brought relief. Relief from another day passed on the edge of anticipation. For those of us who know that 'the heart of man is desperately wicked' and that men have waited for battles before, the beginning of the shooting provided a break in the monotony. For some it was a chance to flex some muscle, for others a chance to learn something about themselves."

Berry, who served as a flight surgeon for an aviation intelligence unit, tells of flying through oil clouds so thick they blocked out the sun. And of losing a best friend. But the real terror of the Gulf War lay in what could have happened: "There was always the potential for something more awful, and the potential, too, for an enormous amount of destruction. True, we did not need all the cold storage space arranged for the anticipated mounds of dead, but the threat was real."

On the other hand, there is the danger now of becoming "cocky or overconfident."

"We deployed round the globe and spent six months preparing to fight an enemy who did not really fight back," he insists. "Did we break his spirit? It was broken, but not by us. Taking credit for more will lead us to be unprepared for the next conflict where blood (not oil) may flow more freely."

Because actual combat was short-lived and casualties relatively few, it is easy to mislead ourselves about the seriousness of the war in the Persian Gulf. Berry recognizes, though, the real cost: "Whether by accident or action the troops who died were serving as volunteers; . . . they went to a strange land and paid the price anticipated by many, but extracted from few. Those who died in the Gulf paid no less terrible a price, and what the soldiers did there was no less important, than what soldiers did in other, more protracted wars. Let us recall those few in number but great in spirit who died serving the land they love."

In a resolution adopted by the faculty on December 2, 1991, he was praised for his development of the Library as a center for learning and for the "refined wit, courteous manners, and veritable mine of well-told stories" he brought to Hampden-Sydney in 1985. A constant source of information, especially for the College's self-study evaluation, he also served as Secretary to two Presidential Search Committees. He received his A.B. in Russian language and literature from Dartmouth College, studied Slavic languages and literature at Yale University, and earned his M.S. in Library Science at Long Island University. He was a member of St. John's Lutheran Church and a founding member of the local chapter of Amnesty International. His wife Gail and his son Alex '92 survive him.

FRANCES HASTINGS BURRELL, a retired elementary school teacher and the wife of RICHARD A. BURRELL '38, former coach and director of athletics, died November 23, 1991. The Burrells have lived at Hampden-Sydney for many years. Mrs. Burrell received her teaching certificate from what is now Longwood College and taught for 40 years in Brunswick, Henrico, and Orange County schools and at Prince Edward Academy in Farmville, retiring in 1980. She was a member of College Church and active in the community.

The Official Hampden-Sydney College World Globe

In celebration of the 500th Anniversary of Christopher Columbus' historic voyage to the New World, the Alumni Association is pleased to present the Official Hampden-Sydney College World Globe. Created by Replogle, the world's undisputed leader in globemaking, this classic floor model globe is fully up-to-date, yet complete with Old World touches such as parchment-like oceans and compass roses.

The Hampden-Sydney College World Globe is complemented by two original 24 karat gold finished art medallions--one features a richly detailed, three-dimensional re-creation of the College Seal and the other commemorates the Quincentenary.

Our Globe is an exceptional piece of furniture. Crafted of solid hardwood, the stand has been hand rubbed to a brilliant cherry finish. The globe with stand measures a perfect chairside height of 33 inches.

For your convenience, an interest-free monthly installment plan is available.

For faster service, credit card orders may be placed weekdays from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. and weekends from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. (Eastern Time). Telephone toll-free 1-800-523-0124 and request Operator 713JR.
